GOV. FOSS RAPS G.O.P. CANDIDATE

PITTSFIELD, Oct. 24.—In one of the most stirring addresses of the present campaign, Governor Foss charged Lieutenant-Governor Frothingham, Lodge machine candidate for Governor, with holding a brief for the United Shoe Machine Company, several of whose officers have been indicted. He called upon him to tell the people of the State, whether, if he is elected, he is going to serve that corporation or the people of the Commonwealth.

The address was the concluding chapter in a day of enthusiastic rallies. Meetings were addressed in Huntington, Great Barrington, Lenox and Lenoxdale during the afternoon, and in the evening a big gathering was held at Lenox, David I. Walsh, candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, being the chief speaker.

Governor Foss was cheered enthusiastically all along the line, as was also David I. Walsh, the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, Frank J. Donahue, candidate for Secretary of State, and Charles B. Strecker, candidate for auditor, were also greeted by the crowds with demonstrations of approval.

Governor Foss attacked Senator Lodge's record on the Payne-Aldrich tariff act and showed that in 129 votes he had voted with Senator Aldrich on every item but one. He quoted the Senator as having declared, after the storm aroused by the passage of the tariff bill had broken, that he never had agreed to favor a downward revision of the tariff.

The Governor then took up the question of reciprocity, which he elaborated at some length.

Mr. Strecker praised the administration of Governor Foss as one of the most constructive and humanitarian that had ever been given the people. Mr. Donahue attacked Secretary of State Langtry's record as a Legislator and as secretary.

"No Record to Stand On."

In his speech at Pittsfield Governor Foss spoke in part as follows:

"I am running for Governor of Massachusetts and for nothing else and I base my appeal for re-election solely upon my record.

"My opponent, having no record of his own and being unable to assail mine, has taken upon himself the burdens of the whole country and presumes to save the National Government and the whole American people from the results of their own folly.

"In doing this he serves no general national purpose nor any public purpose of the people of Massachusetts, and his conduct on the stump as a volunteer guide to the people, shows no public justification whatever.

"Neither he nor his party has either a record to stand upon or a policy on the tariff question. For that reason, they can only howl calamity and misrepresent me. Their efforts in this direction have proved too ridiculous to need comment.

"The Republican candidate overlooks the existence of any but three industries, the boot and shoe industry, the textile industry, and the shoe machinery industry.

"The boot and shoe industry cannot trust the Republicans. If protection is necessary to Massachusetts manufacturers, it was the Republicans who voted to reduce it in the Payne-Aldrich bill and Senator Lodge, out of 129 chances, voted against Senator Aldrich only once.

"The textile industry, as I know, and the public knows, and President Taft has said, is strong enough to stand a reduction of the tariff and there is no issue there.

Massachusetts' Attitude.

"The United Shoe Machinery Company, moreover, which has a monopoly of the shoe machinery industry is now under indictment, presented by the Taft administration and found by a grand jury of Massachusetts men, and the Republican candidate denies to me and claims for Republicans the credit of bringing this company to the bar of justice. Yet, he has gone about the State misrepresenting my attitude toward Massachusetts industries, acting as the mouthpiece of the strongest of the textile mills, and arguing the brief of the indicted Shoe Machinery Company.

"That company has paid out considerable sums of money in newspaper advertising to create public sentiment favorable to itself, and it has succeeded in tying itself up to the Republican ticket.

"By a sort of political ventriloquism, Louis A. Coolidge, its treasurer, speaks through the mouth of Louis A. Frothingham, the Republican candidate.

"The United Shoe Machinery Company's letters are read by the Republican candidate on the stump and then printed with his endorsement as advertisements in the newspapers.

NEW COMET IS SIGHTED AT SEA

A new comet has been sighted by Captain Johnson of the Standard Oil tug Astral, which was reported to the AMERICAN to-day in the following wireless message:

From Standard Oil tug Astral, via Wireless, Quincy, October 24.

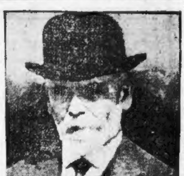
To Boston AMERICAN:

Standard Oil tug Astral reports seeing a new comet, which rose at 3:30 a. m. on the 24th, in due east. It looked very much like Halley's comet of last year, only it had a much longer tail. When seen we were about seven miles off Boston Lightship. CAPTAIN JOHNSON.

DR. JELLY, FAMOUS INSANITY EXPERT, WHO DIED TO-DAY



Recent snapshot of Dr. George F. Jelly, showing the celebrated specialist as he looked shortly before his death.

JELLY, INSANITY EXPERT, IS DEAD

Dr. George Jelly, for thirty years chief examiner of the insane for the city of Boston, and one of the best-known alienists of the country, died to-day at his home, corner of Pleasant and Otis streets, Wakefield. He was called as an expert in many notable cases, including the Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy case in 1907, when he decided upon the competency of the head of the Christian Science Church to manage her own affairs.

As an alienist, Dr. Jelly figured in some of the most noted cases—criminal and civil—in the court history of Massachusetts. He was signally honored by the medical profession and for thirty years was a member of the State examining board.

Dr. Jelly was born in Salem January 22, 1842, the son of William and Sarah J. Jelly. He was graduated from the Harvard Medical School in 1868, and was a house officer in the Boston City Hospital in 1867-68. He received the degree of A. B. at Brown University in 1864 and was a Phi Beta Kappa, the degree of A. M. in 1868 and D. S. in 1907. He received his M. D. at the Harvard Medical School in 1868.

Insanity Specialist.

Dr. Jelly was married in Bath, Me., in 1873, to Ellen A. Parker, who survives him.

After leaving the Harvard Medical School he made a specialty of insanity. He practiced in Springfield in 1868-9, and was assistant physician in the McLean Hospital in 1869-71. In the latter year he was made superintendent of the hospital and remained there eight years. From that time to a year ago he practiced in Boston, and his home was at No. 69 Newbury street. He was a member of the Board of Consultation of the Massachusetts General Hospital, consulting physician of the New England Hospital for Women, a member of the Massachusetts State Board of Insanity, and examining physician of the Registration Department of the city of Boston.

Dr. Jelly was a member of the American Medical Association, of the American Medico-Psychological Association, of the Boston Society of Psychology and Neurology, the Boston Society of Natural History and the New England Psychological Society.

Acted in Hutchinson Case.

He acted as insanity expert when John W. Hutchinson, the "Bard of High Rock," Lynn, was petitioned into court by relatives on the ground that he was incompetent to care for his own property. In every big civil and criminal case in which the question of insanity was brought up it was unusual when Dr. Jelly was not called as one of the examining board. He probably examined more noted persons and acted in more insanity cases in an official way than any man in Massachusetts. He was sought through the entire country by medical societies as a speaker. His papers on insanity were notable throughout the medical profession.

A year ago, on account of ill-health and a press of personal business affairs, he resigned as city examiner of the insane and retired to his country home in Wakefield. He was taken seriously ill several months ago, and there was a general decline to the time of his death.

ADVERTISES FOR HER LOST KITTEN

Grieving for her lost pet, an eight weeks old maltese kitten, a gift to her this past Summer, little Arline Haskell, daughter of Mrs. W. C. Haskell, of No. 46 Claybourne street, Dorchester, has advertised for the missing kitten. Arline Haskell is a graduate of the Dorothy Dix School and has taken prominent part in a number of the school plays, having started in "A Midsummer Nights Dream." At present she is preparing for a part in a vaudeville sketch, "The Last Man on Earth."

During the Summer at St. George, Me., she was presented with the kitten, which she called "Kit," and although only eight weeks old she was training the pet for a part in a little playlet.

"Finding herself in new quarters when we moved here from Newbury street a week ago, she could not wonder around as she was accustomed to at our old home, and I had to keep a close watch over her for fear that she would get lost," said Arline. "Saturday evening an expressman called, and the folks being busy, did not notice her slip out. I hunted all over the neighborhood with no success. I do hope some one will see this story in the Boston AMERICAN and that my kitten will soon be returned to me. I do so hope that whoever did find her will treat her well as she was such a tiny mite and we were so good to her."

SHIBE PARK, Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 24.—After a lay-off of just one week the Giants and Athletics resumed their series for the championship of the world this afternoon.

There was hardly a cloud in the sky. The sun was trying its best to warm things up, but the air was really too cold for comfort. However, ball players, fans and scribes were in such a hurry to get the thing over that they didn't mind the chills.

The day was just right for chief Bender, the Athletic star pitcher, who is at his best in cold weather. He and the rest of the Mackmen were confident of downing the Giants again and making the series safe. There was no confidence in the camp of the Giants, but there was plenty of determination.

McInnes Back in Game.

It was up to Christy Mathewson to start and the king of pitchers felt at his best. He knew he was going to have a hard battle, probably harder than either of the other two, for the Mackmen were due for a batting streak.

Connie Mack figured that he could use Stuffy McInnes on first base again, for the young New Englander's wrist was in much better shape and he was anxious to perform. There were few out-of-town fans left here, but the residents of Philadelphia who haven't been allowed to forget that a series was in progress turned out in force and made their presence known.

Following the regular inspection of the grounds by Umpires Klem and Brennan, they reported to the National Commission. Assistants of Ground Keeper Schroder, who had been working all day yesterday, resumed their labors at dawn.

BOSTON TRAIN JUMPS SWITCH

CONCORD, N. H., Oct. 24.—The Boston & Maine newspaper train leaving Boston at 3 a. m. ran over an open switch at Bow Junction, four miles south of here, to-day, and was headed for the Merrimack River when the engine came to a stop in the dirt a few feet from the riverbank. All on board were shaken up.

At Bow Junction the Suncook branch crosses the river on a covered bridge, which is used by the railroad and by the Manchester & Concord electric line also. There is a single track on the bridge with a switch at either end. The railroad and trolley tracks approach the bridge parallel and the bridge switches are set for either train or trolley as the case may be. All trains and cars slow down on approaching the bridge and wait till they get the signal.

On account of the dense fog, the engineer of the paper train ran by his slowdown post, but managed to jam on his brakes in time to check the speed of the train. The switch was set for the trolley road and the engine and train ran off the open switch and on to the "D" rail, which is placed there for just such emergency. The engine ran off the "D" rail and on the dirt stopping a few feet from the river. The four paper cars, baggage and smoker stayed on the "D" rail or on the track.

A wrecking crew was sent out from Concord, and, after three hours' delay, the engine was hauled back on the track and the train went on.

POLICE GUARD FOR DR. COOK

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 24.—Dr. Frederick Cook's return to this city two years after his triumphant arrival at the time when he was supposed to be the discoverer of the North Pole was marked by scenes that were startling and almost pathetic by contrast with the former demonstrations.

Where before he was welcomed by the Prince in person, escorted to an audience with the King, feted, feasted and welcomed by messages from many of the crowned heads of Europe, this time his carriage had to be guarded from a menacing crowd by a detachment of police.

The throng followed the carriage through the streets, hooting, jeering and threatening. Nevertheless, Dr. Cook declared that he would lecture in this city. He said, however, that he had given up his lecture tour of Europe.

"Not in My Boy's Blood to Be Guilty," Says Father

I know he can't be guilty—it doesn't run in his blood. I came to Boston for the love of my boy. I know he is not guilty. But I am an old soldier, and I want to say, speaking as one, that if Clarence is guilty of the most despicable crime that was ever charged to a man, he is no son of mine. But if he should be guilty, then let the law take its course. I am here to protect my boy, and everything that his old father can do for Clarence will be done.—Statement by Thomas Varland Richeson, father of Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson.

PRIEST AT BED OF MONSIGNOR

The Rev. M. C. Gilbride, one of the curates at St. Augustine's Church, South Boston, left on the Federal express to-day for Baltimore, where Monsignor Denis O'Callaghan is to undergo an operation to-morrow.

The Monsignor is to be operated upon at St. Agnes's Hospital, Baltimore, by Dr. Young of the hospital staff, one of the most eminent surgeons in the country.

Father Gilbride will arrive at the hospital before the operation. He will see Monsignor O'Callaghan immediately upon his arrival and will remain at the hospital after the operation for a few days.

While grave fear is not entertained for the Monsignor, prayers are being said at St. Augustine's for his speedy recovery.

DENIES DUCHESS WILL WED AGAIN

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Mrs. Theodore P. Shonts, mother of the Duchess de Chaulnes, formerly Miss Theodora Shonts, denied to-day the report that the Duchess was soon to marry Prince Joachim Murat. The Duchess has been in this country for several months.

The rumor that the duchess and prince were about to wed was affirmed by a close friend of the Duchess d'Uzes, the bearer of the proudest title in the whole range of the French aristocracy and sister of the Duc de Chaulnes, who died suddenly in Paris in April, 1908, six weeks after his marriage.

Mrs. Shonts said at first that there was no immediate prospect of such an alliance and later, after a conference with her daughter, told a reporter that the rumor was untrue.

Prince Murat is fifth son of the fifth Prince Murat. The Prince is an old friend of the young Duchess d'Uzes, and has never denied the rumor since it first was bruited abroad more than a year ago.

AMERICA'S "GRACE DARLING" SINKING

NEWPORT, Oct. 24.—Ida Lewis, the heroine of Limerock light and America's Grace Darling, is sinking rapidly, and the end is only a question of hours, her physician said to-day. The famous lighthouse keeper continues in a comatose condition. Children in the vicinity of Wellington Park, off of which is Limerock light, and to whom Miss Lewis is akin to the angels, are hushed by the imminence of death and have stopped their usual games and play.

CHARGE FRAUD IN NOMINATION

That the names of dead men non-voters and forged signatures appear on the nomination papers of Augustus Seaver of Boston, labor candidate for Governor, was the charge made by Attorney McIsaac, counsel for Chairman John F. McDonald of the Democratic State committee, at a hearing on the legality of Seaver's papers before the State ballot law commission at the State House to-day.

Mr. Isaac charged that 1,[illegible] of the 1,800 signatures on Seaver's papers were illegal. It developed at the hearing that the matter has already been called to the attention of District-Attorney Pelletier. The penalty for knowingly having illegal signatures on nomination papers is imprisonment for each offence. There is no fine.

LUMBER TRUST SUED FIFTH TIME

ST. PAUL, Oct. 24.—Suits charging violation of the Anti-Trust law were filed by the government here to-day against the Northwestern Lumbermen's Association, the Lumber Secretaries' Bureau of Information, the Lumberman Publishing Company, and Lake W. Bolro, owner of a private detective agency.

The action, the fifth in the government's fight to break up the so-called "trust," charges conspiracy to prevent competition and the maintenance of an alleged blacklist, by means of the Publishing Company.

THOUSANDS SLAIN BY ITALIANS IN TRIPOLI

MALTA, Oct. 24.—In letters received here from Benghazi, Tripoli, the writers estimate the casualties among the inhabitants resulting from the bombardment by the Italian fleet at 4,000. The British consulate was badly damaged and Consul John Francis Jones was wounded. Several Jews who were British subjects, and who had taken refuge in the British consulate, were killed or wounded. Numerous buildings, including a Maltese church, were destroyed. Eight Maltese were killed and ten wounded, it is said.

POISON BOTTLE SOUGHT IN AVIS LINNELL GRAVE

The body of Avis Linnell will be exhumed at Hyannis late to-day. Arrangements were made through District Attorney Joseph Kenny of New Bedford, who secured the permission of the girl's parents. Search will be made for the bottle that contained the potassium cyanide and possibly for other evidence.

Miss Russell Richeson, a trained nurse and sister of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, accused of the murder of Avis Linnell by giving her cyanide of potassium in the guise of medicine, visited her accused brother to-day in the Charles Street Jail and told him about the arrival in this city of their father, Thomas Varland Richeson, and an attorney from their old home in Virginia.

It was learned to-day that Miss Violet Edmands, the fiancee of Richeson, is seriously ill at her Brookline home. She has not been out of the house for a week. She was unable to take a carriage ride with her sister, Rose, and their father to-day.

PELLETIER SUMMONS CARTER.

When Miss Richeson entered the jail she was asked to take a chair in the rotunda for a few moments until an official could see whether her brother were ready to see her. The official returned quickly and said:

"Everything is ready now."

Miss Richeson walked back to the cell and sticking her hand through the bars exclaimed in a broken voice:

"Clarence!"

Tears streamed down the face of the woman. The clergyman told her not to cry—that everything would come all right. After that Miss Richeson recovered her composure and gave her brother a message from their father. A guard standing near asked:

"Would you like a chair, Miss Richeson?"

"No, thank you," she replied. "I would rather stand."

From now on, it was learned to-day, the murder case will be exclusively in the hands of District Attorney Pelletier, who will handle it personally. When Deputy Superintendent Watts and Chief Duggan were asked about the progress of the police investigation they referred reporters to District Attorney Pelletier. Mr. Pelletier was asked:

"Will the body of Avis Linnell be exhumed?"

"I have nothing to say about that," replied the district attorney. "I did not authorize the story that there was to be such action in the case. All I care to say is that I will present this case to the grand jury."

Frank H. Carter was called to the office of the District Attorney in Pemberton square to-day. The District Attorney wished to know if he could tell anything that would aid the prosecution in the case.

It was surmised that Mr. Pelletier would ask Mr. Carter about the contents of Richeson's room, and who ransacked it before the police went there, following the arrest of the clergyman.

Carter would probably be called upon to tell about his dog and whether or not Richeson had ever threatened to poison it.

Thomas Varland Richeson, the father of the accused clergyman, declared to-day that he would fight to the last drop of his blood for "my boy" if he is innocent of the heinous crime charged against him, but that if he is guilty the law should take its course.

"Here to Save My Boy."

By this the impression should not be gained that the aged, silvery-haired typical Virginia tobacco planter did not mean to intimate that he admitted the possibility of his son being guilty. He believes that his son is absolutely innocent and that it will be proven.

"I am in Boston to save my boy," he declared. I know he is not guilty. He can't be guilty—it doesn't run in his blood. It will kill me if my boy is guilty."

The accused clergyman has made two statements about his own case so far as is known. One of these statements he made to Violet Edmands last week, as he was being taken from the Brookline home of his fiancee and the girl lay sobbing her heart out.

"Don't cry, Violet," the preacher said to her. "Everything will come out right."

To a friend who visited him in the Charles Street Jail, believed to be Edwin S. Watson, treasurer of the Immanuel Baptist Church of Cambridge of which the Rev. Mr. Richeson is still pastor, in spite of the dark cloud that hangs over him, the clergyman said:

"I Am Innocent," Says Richeson.

"I am innocent, and will prove it when the right time comes."

Backing up the faith of the father in his son and the assertions of innocence of the son, himself, is evidence said to be in the hands of the defence already. This evidence consists, it is declared, of the cyanide of potassium that Richeson bought from Druggist Hahn of Newton Centre and the dog that Richeson said he wanted to kill.

It is reported that the defence has the vial of poison and all of it. It is believed that this was obtained from Richeson's room on Magazine street, Cambridge. It will be recalled that when the police headquarters detectives went to this room after the arrest of Richeson they found that some one had been there and had disturbed things. It is now believed that this was a detective working in the interest of Richeson.

It will be important to have Druggist Hahn show just how much cyanide of potassium he sold Richeson. Then it will be shown that Avis Linnell took fifteen grains.

To Produce Dog in Court.

If the defence should show that no cyanide of potassium is missing from the bottle, and that the filled bottle contains the same kind of cyanide of potassium that Hahn sold, it would be a great point in favor of Richeson.

Then comes the dog story. Hahn says that Richeson declared he wanted to kill a dog that was about to have puppies. The defence will deny part of this story, it is said. They will admit, probably, that Richeson said that he wanted to kill an annoying dog—and they will produce the dog in court.

This dog is a four-months-old mongrel Boston terrier. It belongs to Frank H. Carter, with whom Richeson roomed. The dog, Carter will testify, annoyed the preacher, and it may be testified that he threatened to kill it. But this is a male dog, and the further fact remains that it is alive. Here two questions arise:

If Richeson wanted to kill Carter's dog why did he tell Hahn, if he did tell him, that the dog was about to have puppies—a remark into which the police read the most damning and sinister meaning of any one thing in the whole fiendish crime.

Theory of a Third Man.

The second question is—if Richeson wanted to kill Carter's dog, why didn't he do it after buying the poison? All he would have had to do was to open the pup's mouth and place a pinch of the poison on the dog's tongue and that would have finished him.

The mystery about the Carter dog increased to-day when reporters went to the Carter home in Cambridge and asked to see it so that it might be photographed. No dog was to be found. Reporters who had hung around the house a good deal since the murder of Avis Linnell could not recall that they had ever seen or heard a dog there. Neighbors said they hadn't seen any dog. The reporters were referred to the Burns Detective Agency and it is believed that the detectives are guarding the dog carefully.

Besides these things that the defence will marshal in favor of Richeson, the defence will follow the line, it is believed, that proved successful in the trial of Hattie Le Blanc, charged with the murder of Clarence F. Glover. They will introduce another man and claim that he had just as good a reason, if not better, to give the girl poison as Richeson.

The defence for Hattie Le Blanc tried to make it appear that Mrs. Lillian M. Glover killed her husband. Just how the jury looked at this phase of the matter is not known. But Hattie Le Blanc went free and the murder of Glover has not been avenged.

The Boston police, they have specifically declared, place no faith in the second man story, and those who knew Avis Linnell best indignantly deny any such implication. The relatives of Avis Linnell, her girl friends at Hyannis and her associates at the Y. W. C. A. declare that Avis Linnell had a heart for only one man—Richeson.

One friend of the dead girl says that she believed that Avis thought herself married to Richeson because she wore a plain wedding ring. Here comes another pertinent question.

May Call Fiancee.

Was there ever a secret little ceremony between Avis Linnell and Richeson that made the girl believe that she was married to him and was that an incentive for getting her out of the way?

The defence of Richeson will contend, it is said, that the second man in the case was in Boston on Saturday a week ago and that he saw Avis Linnell, while Richeson did not see her that day. Richeson's fiancee, Violet Edmands, will probably be called to the witness stand to testify that he was at her home all of the fatal Saturday afternoon.

How Avis Linnell, the Young Girl, Was Baptized and Won By Richeson, the Clergyman, at Her Hyannis Home

HYANNIS, Oct. 24.—Friends of Avis Linnell to-day told for the first time the real story of the engagement of the pretty choir singer to the stalwart, fascinating clergyman, the Rev. Charles V. T. Richeson. Three dates figured in the happy event—three golden days which the little girl often recalled to her friends. They were:

SUNDAY, June, 1909—This was the day that the Rev. Mr. Richeson baptized Avis Linnell. It was a solemn, sacred event.

MONDAY, the next day—The pastor and the girl sailed on the blue, sun-kissed sea in the quiet waters off Hyannisport. They went to a pretty island with the unromantic name of Squaw's Island, but it was a romantic spot to the girl. For there the clergyman told Avis of his love. And she, lifted as though on angel's wings, said "yes."

TUESDAY, the following day—Avis told of the happy event to her friends. It buzzed through church circles, and every one said: "It is an ideal match."

Were Going to Symphony.

One of the most important witnesses in the case will be Miss Lucille Zeigler, a Y. W. C. A. friend of Avis Linnell. Miss Zeigler will be called to show that Avis Linnell did not contemplate suicide because the two girls had bought tickets for that evening for the Boston Symphony concert. This fact is told in the AMERICAN to-day for the first time and has a most important bearing on the case from the standpoint of proving that the girl took a deadly draught of poison thinking it was medicine.

The girls had procured their tickets at the Young Women's Christian Association building late Saturday afternoon, and subsequent to Miss Linnell meeting and taking luncheon with Richeson, as the police claim she did.

Miss Linnell went to the bathroom about 7 o'clock and Miss Ziegler was waiting for her. They were to start shortly for Symphony Hall. Finally Miss Zeigler became impatient. She walked into the hall and meeting another girl, said:

"I wonder what can be keeping Avis so long."

"Why," replied another girl, "one of the girls is sick in the bath room."

"I hope it is not Avis," replied Miss Zeigler. "I'll go and see."

Miss Zeigler ascertained that it was her friend. It is positively stated that one of the girls picked up a white piece of paper that had contained a powder and it was believed that Avis had dropped it. The girl looked at the powder to see if there was anything on it that would show what the girl had swallowed or from where it had been obtained. There was no mark on it.

Avoided Y. W. C. A. Building.

"There is no question," said one of the girls connected with the Young Women's Christian Association building, "but that Avis meant to go to the concert that evening, and when she swallowed that medicine she had not the faintest idea that it was a deadly poison.

"Here's another thing," continued the girl. "Richeson was never seen in the Y. W. C. A. building but once. He always waited for Avis on the outside of the building, and we girls said more than once that if we had a sweetheart that we would make him come in and meet the other girls.'"

Just as certain that Avis Linnell expected to live was the assurance of the Rev. Mr. Richeson that he would be married to Miss Edmands on the last day of this month. These facts establish that he fully expected to be married and that if he killed Avis Linnell he felt that the crime would go undetected.

Two weeks ago Richeson leased the house at No. 143 Magazine street for his bride.

A week later he took out $1,000 fire insurance on the furniture to be moved in.

Richeson had his wedding clothes—a Prince Albert suit, two other suits and many other garments.

To-day he expected to move in his furniture and had arranged to take additional fire and life insurance.

Chief Dugan and Deputy Superintendent Watts completed their arrangements to-day for presenting the case to the grand jury, under the direction of District Attorney Pelletier. This will be done at a special sitting of the grand jury convened on Thursday of this week. The police have declared that they have almost completed their case, which means that they think they have enough evidence against Richeson to secure an indictment for murder in the first degree.

Expect Trial in January.

But an indictment and a verdict of guilty are two entirely different things. The real fight for the life of the accused clergyman will come in the courts and it is believed the trial, if the man is indicted, will begin as early as January.

The Boston police have apparently made up their minds to make a record for celerity in this case. Of course, the defence always is to be considered, and it will be given ample time to prepare what is expected to be one of the greatest legal battles ever fought in Massachusetts for the life of a man. The elements of interest in the trial will be infinite.

Professor Whitney, the Harvard poison expert, who has figured in many important cases, has the stomach of Avis Linnell. He will be able to tell just the amount of poison the girl took, the kind, how long it took to kill her and other important facts.

Poison Expert Retained.

Dr. Alfred W. Balch, professor af analytical and organic chemistry at the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy and assistant professor of medical chemistry and toxicology at Tufts College, has also been retained by the government as expert in the case. Dr. Balch was graduated from the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy in 1894 and from the Harvard Medical School in 1898.

Fatigued by the long railroad journey from Amherst Courthouse, the Virginia birthplace of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, but with his spirit still undaunted, the father of the accused clergyman is resting at his hotel and planning the details of his effort to clear his son.

His personal attorney accompanied him to Boston and will assist those who have taken up the defence of the Cambridge pastor.

To an AMERICAN reporter, who met Colonel Richeson and his lawyer at the South Station, the father reiterated his belief in the innocence of his son with all the positiveness he could command.

He repeated many of the statements made to a staff correspondent of the AMERICAN, who talked with him at his Virginia home, and added, dramatically:

No Son of Mine, if Guilty.

If Clarence is guilty of the most despicable crime with which a man can be charged, he is no son of mine. Then the law must take its course.

Colonel Richeson, carrying himself as erect as when he marched in the ranks of the Confederacy, brought with him only a black handsatchel. He had hurried to the side of his favorite son and had given no thought or time to the matter of baggage.

Signs of travel marked his kindly face, with its goatee and mustache. He was tired, almost beyond endurance. He had been riding since 6 o'clock Monday morning from the home from which the idol of his heart had set out, a young man, to carve a career. He had followed his progress in the ministry through frequent letters and had taken comfort in the fact in his declining years.

Now, when "his boy" was in a cell, he expressed the same undying confidence in him. His fatigue seemed to pass from him, when, in vigorous tones and in the indescribable charm of language of the Southron, he told again of his unshaken faith.

"I came to Boston only for the love of my boy," he told an AMERICAN reporter. "I know he is not guilty.

"I only have to repeat what my attorney said, as I see quoted in the Sunday AMERICAN, that it will kill me if my boy is guilty.

"I know he can't be guilty—it doesn't run in his blood." The colonel spoke with all the pride of family in the Southron, drawing himself up and speaking with tremendous earnestness.

Let the Law Take Its Course.

"I am an old soldier, and I want to say, speaking as one, that if Clarence is guilty of the most despicable crime that was ever charged to a man," and here Colonel Richeson's tone changed to that of a commander passing the words of death at a military courtmartial, "he is no son of mine. If he should be guilty, then let the law take its course.

"Although I have received several messages from the Edmands family in Brookline, asking me to stay at their home while I am North, I have not made up my mind yet just what I shall do.

"All I do know is that I am here to protect my boy and that everything that his old father can do for Clarence will be done."

SCHOOLBOY SWEETHEART OF AVIS LINNELL ASKS JUSTICE BE DONE

Byron Nason in Boston on Fatal Day, but Did Not See the Young Woman.

BERLIN, N. H., Oct. 24.—Byron Nason, an instructor in manual training in the Berlin High School and a schoolboy sweetheart of Avis Linnell, murdered in Boston with cyanide of potassium, was in Boston on the day the young woman died. He declared to a reporter to-day that he did not see Avis Linnell on that day, however.

Mr. Nason admitted that he could get a peck of cyanide of potassium in connection with his work at the school if he wanted it. He wrote this statement for the AMERICAN:

> Berlin, N. H., Oct. 23, 1911.
>
> I knew the late Miss Linnell as a schoolmate and am very anxious to have justice done in finding out the person responsible for her death.
>
> BYRON NASON.

"I could get a peck of cyanide of potassium if I wanted to," said Mr. Nason, "and I say this now because it is my last interview. It is not true that I said that I dined with Avis Linnell last Saturday week.

Over Night in Boston.

"I know how that report started. Someone said that he overheard me say that to a druggist. I did not say it, and the druggist says I did not.

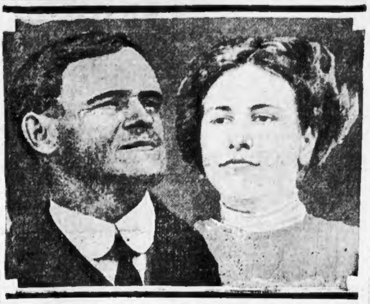
"Now as to the cyanide of potassium, I have a peck of it at my disposal in the forge room. I could, of course, get any of that I wanted."

Nason went to Boston Friday evening, the day before Avis Linnell died, remained there over night and went to Hyannis the next day. He was called there as a witness in a court case. When asked about his visit to Boston Mr. Nason was reticent.

Nason said that he did not recall the name of the hotel he stopped over night in Boston and his recollection of just what he did in that city was very vague.

Wrote Letter to Avis.

"You may think that I seem reticent," said Nason, "but I cannot see how my talking would do any good. I know nothing about the murder of this girl and am anxious that it be cleared up.



Miss Linnell and Byron Nason, from photographs taken when they were attending the Normal School at Hyannis. Mr. Nason is a teacher at Berlin, N. H.

"I went to Hyannis Saturday and got to thinking over old times there, and I wrote her a letter. But she was dead at the time I was writing. I wrote to her and got letters from her. All of her letters are destroyed. I did that after I returned here from Hyannis and Boston."

PASTOR DEVOTED TO AVIS, SAYS CHUM OF SLAIN GIRL

Miss Helen Margaret Crosby, a junior at Barnard College, who was a classmate of Avis Linnell at the Hyannis High School, told to-day how devoted the Rev. Mr. Richeson had been to the girl. He was the only intimate male friend Avis had, she declared. Miss Crosby, whose home now is in New York, said:

"Everybody in Hyannis knew that Dr. Richeson and Avis were engaged to be married."

"I knew Avis very well; in fact, she was a warm friend of mine, and she had often spoken to me of Mr. Richeson and her plans to become his wife. From what Avis said I gained the impression that the minister was absolutely devoted to her. This impression was strengthened by Mr. Richeson's attention to Avis when they appeared together in public.

Richeson Had No Rival.

"I am sure that the minister had no rival. I had known Avis ever since she was a little girl. We went to public school in Hyannis together. We were in the same class in high school and were graduated in 1908.

"It was just after the graduation of Avis from high school that the Rev. Mr. Richeson appeared. He went to Hyannis to preach in the Baptist church there.

"Mr. Richeson was then a theological student. All of the girls in Hyannis thought he was good looking. His manners were splendid. The men in our set did not take to him very much, but I believe that is usually the case with men when they are thrown in contact with a man stranger.

"Avis was then the belle of the social set in Hyannis. The men were devoted to her. She did not lack for suitors, because she was the type of girl that appeals strongly to the average man; she was cultured, had a very sweet disposition and was very pretty.

"Avis was attracted toward Mr. Richeson from the first, it seemed. He, on his part, paid court to her after their first meeting. The girls soon noticed the mutual attraction, and it was whispered that they would soon announce their engagement. We thought it would make a splendid match.

Engagement Announced.

"Well, in August, of 1909, Avis told her friends that she and Mr. Richeson were engaged. It was just what we had expected. Congratulations were showered upon Avis and the minister. Avis was then teaching music in Hyannis. She was ambitious and talented.

"Richeson was very attentive to Avis after their engagement became known. He seemed deeply in love with her, and as for Avis, she had eyes for no one but the minister. They visited our home together many times, the last visit they paid to me was in September, 1910. Avis wore an engagement ring and was very proud of it.

"Last Summer I went to Hyannis from college. Richeson and Avis still were wrapped up in each other. I spoke to Avis about the minister and she said she loved him with all her heart. He had no rival.

"Stories which have appeared to the effect that Richeson had a rival are false. He taught Avis to love him.

"Before I returned to New York last Fall Avis told me that she expected to marry Mr. Richeson within a year. She was finishing her course at the Boston Conservatory. I believe that Avis was planning to do missionary work with Richeson after their marriage."

A New Engagement.

Mr. Richeson was reported engaged to a young woman in or near Haverhill, Mass., two years ago, according to Miss Crosby.

A young woman from the neighborhood of Haverhill, and also a Barnard student, on meeting Miss Crosby at the college one day and learning that she was from Hyannis, asked if she knew Richeson. Miss Crosby said that she had met him as the fiance of her friend, Avis Linnell. The other student then told of Richeson's coming to Haverhill for a two or three weeks' stay two years ago and of his meeting there, or in Georgetown, near by, a young girl to whom, when Richeson left after his short stay, it was understood that he was engaged.

Met at High School.

The Hyannis High School, from which Avis Linnell was graduated with the class of 1908, has among its students young men and women from several surrounding villages. It is what they call the "town high school" for the township of Barnstable. It was thus that Miss Crosby met Avis Linnell and became intimately acquainted with her. Several other young persons from the township who were in the Hyannis High School at the same time, and who now are in New York, dropped in to see Miss Crosby at No. 604 West One Hundred and Forty-sixth street to-day. All knew Avis Linnell well and were her friends, but most of them did not know Richeson except by sight.

In all, Miss Linnell brought Richeson three times to call at the Crosby home. On each occasion the engagement was mentioned.

When Richeson's engagement to Miss Edmands was published in the Boston newspapers Miss Linnell's friends understood from it that her engagement to the minister was off. The young woman, however, continued with her preparations which she had begun at the time she told of her engagement. She had had considerable clothing made and had done much work herself in getting her trousseau ready. The friends of the girl did not quite understand her position in the matter of Richeson's announced engagement to Miss Edmands, but she seemed to believe that the announcement had been a mistake.

RICHESON'S FATE MAY BE DECIDED BY DOG IN THE CARTER HOME

Mongrel Cur Will Probably Figure in the Case of the Accused Pastor.

A little mongrel dog—a puppy, in fact—may aid in establishing the innocence of Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, or it may help in sending him to the electric chair in punishment for the crime with which he is charged—the murder of Avis Linnell.

The puppy is a mongrel Boston terrier, scarcely four months old. It will be claimed by the defence that it was to rid himself of the unwelcome presence of this little animal in his rooms that Richeson went out to Newton Centre and obtained the cyanide of potassium, one of the most deadly poisons known, from Druggist William H. Hahn.

The defence will claim that although the pastor obtained enough of the poison to kill more than two score of dogs he did not use it, because the members of the Carter family, with whom he boarded, and owned the puppy, managed to keep it away from the minister's rooms, thus causing him to postpone his intention of killing the animal.

It is asserted that attorneys for the defence have obtained through their private detectives the full quantity of the cyanide of potassium that Richeson obtained from Hahn, that it is contained in the same phial in which the druggist placed it, and that Richeson never used any of it or gave any of the deadly crystals to Avis Linnell or to anyone else. This, it is asserted, will dispose of the principal claim of the prosecution that the accused pastor was responsible for the poison being in the young Hyannis girl's possession.

That in his conversation with Hahn, when he obtained the poison the minister made no reference to a female dog whom he desired to kill because she was about to have puppies, will also be one of the points the defence will try to establish, is also declared by those who claim to know what the probable line of defence will be.

Private detectives employed by the defence claim that Richeson did say that he desired the cyanide of potassium with which to kill a dog, and they promise also to produce the dog in question and give very good reasons why the minister desired to put the animal out of the way. They will also produce witnesses whose testimony will corroborate this line of testimony.

It will in this particular be a contest of veracity between Hahn and Richeson.

When Druggist Hahn first told his story it was contended that Richeson did not own a dog, and for that reason it was assumed that he had told a falsehood in purchasing the poison, and this was readily accepted as a very serious circumstance against him.

Mother, brothers and sisters of the Rev. C. V. T. Richeson, photographed in their Virginia home and published for the first time by the American. Mrs. Richeson is dead.

Mrs. Carter's Own Dog.

It has developed that there is a dog in the household in which Mr. Richeson lived, but it is a male dog, and if Hahn's statement is to be accepted upon its face there is still a discrepancy in the statements of the minister made, according to the druggist, at the time of the purchase of the cyanide, for Mr. Hahn declares that Mr. Richeson said he desired to kill a female dog about to have puppies.

The dog is not the personal property of the minister, but is owned by Mrs. F. H. Carter of No. 147 Magazine street, Cambridge, where Mr. Richeson boarded.

The dog was so attached to Richeson and was so much in his apartments that it was about the same as his own dog, in effect. For this reason the dog, it is contended, became an annoyance to the pastor, and he desired, so the story runs, to put it out of the way in as merciful a manner as possible.

He purchased the cyanide of potassium stating what he wanted it for at the time, it is claimed, but he never used it, because the time for the sacrifice of the household pet did not arrive.

The dog is a mongrel Boston terrier, and was bred by Henry E. Chase, a real estate man of Cliftondale.

Mr. Chase is Mr. Carter's father, and he boarded the dog last Summer, when Mrs. Carter was away on her vacation. The little animal is being carefully guarded, as one of the exhibits of the defence.

The members of the Carter household are convinced that Richeson is an innocent and much persecuted man. They will support him in his defence.

They are unable, however, to understand why he should desire to kill their dog, which has been a household pet and always was much attached to the minister.

It is admitted, however, that the dog was an annoyance to some of the household because he was not housebroken.

With shades drawn and nearly every room in the house brilliantly lighted, an important conference was held in the home of Frank H. Carter, No. 147 Magazine street, Cambridge, where Rev. Mr. Richeson roomed. When an AMERICAN reporter called at the house Mrs. Carter met him at the door.

"You cannot see Mr. Carter," she said. "He is very busy and will be until very late."

Long after midnight the rooms were still lighted, and as nobody had come out it was thought the conference was still going on. A man could be seen in the front room gesticulating to somebody opposite him.

Several friends of Mr. Richeson made the statement that he was eccentric. One of them said that among those who received announcements of his coming marriage to Miss Violet Edmands was a colored man from his church, his tailor and the police officer who patrolled his street.

Another friend of Mr. Richeson said that the clergyman made several enemies in church by his uncalled-for remarks from the pulpit.

"On one occasion," said the friend, "when Mr. Richeson was preaching a woman came in late. He looked up and said: 'For those who come in late and for those who are obliged to leave early, I have a copy of my sermon here which they can read if they desire.' That remark and a few others he made caused a certain amount of ill feeling in the church."

The neighborhood in the vicinity of No. 147 Magazine street is known as "the fateful neighborhood." Within a short distance of the number three figures in sensations of nation-wide interest within the past eleven years have lived.

First, there was the killing of Richard Grogan, which was charged to Professor Charles R. Eastman of Harvard, his brother-in-law, on July 4, 1899. Professor Eastman was tried for murder, but acquitted. Frank H. Carter, the friend of Mr. Richeson, was a prominent government witness in the trial. The Grogan residence was less than half a mile from where Mr. Richeson resided.

About a year ago George W. Coleman was arrested at his home, No. 136 Magazine street, charged with stealing $100,000 from the National City Bank of Cambridge. He is in the Greenfield jail.

Now comes the arrest of Mr. Richeson, who lived at No. 147 Magazine street, on the charge of having caused the death of Avis Linnell. Again Mr. Carter is a prominent figure in the case. He is a personal friend of the clergyman and believes in his innocence.

SAYS AVIS LINNELL HAD PLANNED RAINBOW WEDDING

HYANNIS, Oct. 24.—That it was positively known to girl chums of Avis Linnell that there was a marriage engagement between her and Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, that their wedding was set originally for a year ago this month and that the wedding day was postponed by Richeson, is declared by William Ormsby, father of Miss Ellen Ormsby, who was to be a bridesmaid.

Richeson told Miss Linnell, said Mr. Ormsby, that he could not marry her in October, 1910, as planned, because his "work would interfere with his being married then," according to word received by the girls who were to be the bridesmaids.

Took Back Ring.

A diamond ring and a gold band ring, resembling a wedding ring, had been given Avis by Richeson, but later Miss Linnell stopped wearing the diamond engagement ring and it was understood by her intimate girl chums that Richeson had taken it back for some reason.

Avis and the clergyman remained intimate friends after she stopped wearing the diamond ring, however, and as late as the past Summer, when he spent his vacation here, they were seen together much. With Miss Ormsby, Misses Beulah Mecarta, Helen Crosby and Georgia Collins were to be the bridesmaids at the wedding of Miss Linnell and Richeson.

"The plans for the wedding were made principally by Miss Mecarta and Miss Collins on behalf of Miss Linnell," said Mr. Ormsby, "and they asked my daughter, who had been a classmate of Avis in the Hyannis Normal School, to be a bridesmaid.

"Avis did not talk of the wedding with my daughter to any considerable degree, for the two girls did not see much of each other after they were graduated from the Normal School in 1910.

"During the Spring of 1910, when the girls were preparing for commencement at the Normal School, they met together frequently to work on their graduation gowns. During these gatherings there was much talk about the approaching wedding of Avis and the minister. Some of the girls nicknamed him 'Clarence Virginia Tennessee Richeson' in talking with Avis.

Planned "Rainbow Wedding."

"My daughter never received any direct word from Avis that the wedding had been postponed," continued Mr. Ormsby. "She expected right along that the wedding would take place the following October, until she understood from the other girls that it had been postponed by Richeson because it would interfere with his work to be married at that time."

Miss Linnell, her girl friends here say, planned to have a "rainbow" wedding. Some of the bridesmaids had begun making their gowns when they heard the wedding had been postponed. The bridesmaids were to be gowned in different colors, Miss Crosby in pink, Miss Collins in blue and one of the others in yellow.

The church decorations—for it was to be a church wedding—were to resemble the cardinal colors of the rainbow and there was to be a background of vari-colored floral decorations.

RICHESON TELLS CHURCH OFFICIAL HE IS INNOCENT

Through the bars of his cell, the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson continues to assure his visitors at the Charles street jail that he soon will be at liberty and adjures them not to worry. His cheerfulness amazes those who have been permitted access to him.

Expecting to see the pastor cast down by the shock of his imprisonment on the charge that he murdered Avis Linnell by giving her poison, Treasurer E. S. Watson of the Immanuel Baptist Church, Cambridge, was surprised when he was admitted to "Murderers' Row" in the jail and Richeson greeted him smilingly through the bars. N. E. Hughes, a member of the congregation, accompanied Mr. Watson to the jail office.

They remained about twenty minutes talking with the accused pastor.

Watson said to-day Richeson was in cheerful spirits.

"Mr. Richeson and I," he said, "talked business concerning the church nearly all the time we were there. He seemed to be in a very cherful mood and stated that he was sure that he soon would be at liberty, as the charge against him was untrue. He told us not to worry, that everything would come out all right. He also told us that his sister had visited him in the morning and he seemed very greatly pleased over her visit."

Sister Meets Accused.

The treasurer refused to say whether Richeson and he had discussed the pastor's resignation. "We talked church business," was all he would say.

Richeson's sister, Miss L. U. Richeson, was his first visitor of the day.

She arrived alone at the jail and was not subjected to the questions of newspaper men or obliged to run the gamut of a battery of camera men. In the presence of a jail official she talked through the bars to her brother and their meeting was an affecting one.

The last visitor of the day was Attorney Phillip R. Dunbar of his counsel. He came to the jail in a closed carriage and remained in consultation with his client at least an hour.

With the departure of Mr. Watson and Lawyer Dunbar yesterday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Richeson received the last privileges that will be accorded him by Sheriff Seavey as far as visitations are concerned. Hereafter the prison rules covering visits to inmates will be more closely conformed to, and with the exception of his counsel, who is entitled to call upon his client at any time, Rev. Mr. Richeson will be allowed only three visitors a week, one each on Monday, Thursday and Saturday.

This strict rule may be suspended in the event of someone proving to the satisfaction of the sheriff that he is warranted in asking for the suspension of the rule and then he will be admitted only by a

It is quite likely that Sheriff Seavey will accede to the wishes of the prisoner's sister and his father, or any other particularly close friends.

The Easiest Way To Remove Hairs

(Beauty Culture.)

Since the discovery and use of powdered delatone for removing fuzz or hair from the skin's surface, no woman need go through life with an otherwise beautiful neck or face marred by unsightly growths.

Any druggist can supply delatone, and while an original ounce package costs a dollar, it is a good investment, because one application usually suffices. A little of the powder should be mixed with water to form a paste, then spread on the hairs not wanted and left two or three minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed. No pain is felt with this delatone treatment, and the skin is left white, firm and hairless, with slight chances of its ever returning again.

To Whom It May Concern:

To correct one word in my advertisement of yesterday and to make my proposition more explicit and broader, I now put it in the following form:

If I cannot prove by two public accountants that the statement circulated by Governor Foss and Mr. Walsh, to the effect that the Farr Alpaca Company is paying 576 or 596 per cent. a year on the only cash capital ever paid in is absolutely false, and further prove that our current dividend rate as indicated by last year's payments amounted approximately to 7½ per cent. on our sales for the year, I will forfeit $5,000 to the Brightside Orphanage, provided that if I prove my contention they will at their campaign rally in this city acknowledge they have traduced us.

STOPS YOUR HAIR FALLING OUT AND DISSOLVES DANDRUFF AT ONCE

Your hair appears soft, lustrous, fluffy and abundant after using a little Danderine.

What causes Dandruff, itchy scalp and falling hair? Who cares—so long as Danderine overcomes this—and it does, and quickly, too—it does more, it grows hair, and we can prove it.

Try as you will, after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or a loose or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you will actually see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting all over the scalp.

A little Danderine now will immediately double the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and prove to yourself to-night—now—that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.

This mystery talk about "patent processes" that take out the "bite" is dished up for you—if you're gullible.

QBOID is made for Men and Pipes—not for boys and cigarettes.

For years we have manufactured QBOID, the original granulated plug tobacco, without the need of any "patent process," and we know that no "patent process" can take the place of long experience in selecting sweet, clear stock and the instinct of skilled workmanship in knowing just how to make a perfect pipe tobacco.

QBOID WILL NOT BITE THE TONGUE

Over 100 imitations of Qboid have been on the market at one time or another.

Look them all over. You'll enjoy Qboid all the more.

Try a 10c tin today. Your dealer has it.
Also put up in 20c, 45c and 90c sizes.

SAY, MUTT, I HEAR A LOT OF TALK ABOUT THE DIFFERENCE IN BALLS IN THE AMERICAN LEAGUE AND THE NATIONAL. WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE
WHY THEY CLAIM THAT ONE HAS MORE RESILIENCY THAN THE OTHER. RESILIENCY MEANS TO BOUNCE
NOW HERE'S ONE AMERICAN LEAGUE BALL AND ONE NATIONAL. WELL TEST 'EM. - YOU TURN AROUND AND KEEP YOUR EYE ON THAT BRICK WALL AND I'LL THROW THE BALLS AND YOU SEE WHICH ONE BOUNCES THE MOST
NOW THAT'S THE AMERICAN LEAGUE BALL AND —
AND THAT'S THE NATIONAL LEAGUE BALL WHICH ONE DO YOU THINK BOUNCES THE MOST?
OH, ABOUT THE SAME
I DON'T WANT TO IMPOSE ON YOU, MUTT, BUT SOMETIME WHEN YOU'VE GOT A PAIR OF SPIKED SHOES, I'D LIKE TO HAVE YOU SHOW ME HOW SNODGRASS SPIKED BAKER

FROTHINGHAM HARD HIT BY FOSS

Foss Charges That Lieutenant-Governor Is a Shoe Machinery Trust Agent.

has to pay for its newspaper advertising; it gets the Republican candidate free.

WALSH SHOWS HOW HIGH TARIFF DOES NOT RAISE WAGES

Massachusetts is one of the most progressive States in the Union, and one of the most highly protected. Yet it has thousands and thousands of people earning less than a normal rate of wage. Half of the men workers of the country at large are making less than $500 a year, whereas it is considered that $900 is the minimum on which a man can support a family under normal conditions.

Among women the wages are even more discouraging. Three-quarters of them make less than $400 annually.

Where, then, does the boasted protective system benefit the laborer? And he pays more now for everything he eats and wears on account of this so-called protective policy.—David I. Walsh, in speech at Pittsfield.

"The United Shoe Machinery Company is under indictment for alleged restraint of trade and injury to the boot and shoe industry of Massachusetts. The Republican candidate says that the United Shoe Machinery Company is the most beneficent industrial institution in this State. That company has to pay its lawyers; the Republican candidate, however, holds its brief and argues its case free.

"When the shoe manufacturers came to me and complained of the United Shoe Machinery Company, I at once took steps to bring them relief, but the Republican Legislature objected and Senator Lodge and Senator Crane hastened to have this beneficent institution indicted 'by its friends.' The company has joined hands with the Republicans in fighting me.

Cannot Serve Two Masters.

"The Shoe Machinery Trust is now taking part in the politics of this State; its voice is heard in Republican rallies and its mouthpiece is the Republican candidate for Governor. The Textile Trust has narrowed the Republican campaign down to a defence of its dividends. In his zeal to serve the strong textile interests and the indicted Shoe Machinery Trust, the Republican candidate has made a false issue of the tariff, has misrepresented my position on that question, and has not only overlooked entirely the general industrial interests of Massachusetts, but has ignored the very existence of the great body of our citizens.

"My opponent may have shown distinguished qualifications to serve the textile monopoly and the Shoe Machinery Trust, but he has furnished little evidence either of ability or intention to serve the whole people of Massachusetts.

"No man may serve two masters. The alliances of the Republican candidate are now known to everybody. My record shows that I have attempted to serve only one master—the people of this Commonwealth. It is that I may continue this service that I ask for re-election."

Appeal to All Classes.

"The Democratic platform," said Mr. Walsh, "has about twenty planks of utmost importance to the people of Massachusetts and to the country at large.

"It stands first of all for true Democracy, the initiative and referendum or direct legislation, which means the restoration of popular government to the people. It stands for the federal income tax amendment; the direct election of United States Senators; national parcels post; the pre-election publicity of campaign expenses; consolidation of State commissions; the creation of a State department of labor; the creation of a State finance commission; a sweeping plan of prison reform; the loan of public funds at competitive rates; revision of taxation; the abolition of party enrolment at the primaries; publicity pamphlet about candidates; a reduction of telephone rates; a referendum on equal suffrage; the creation of an adequate public utilities board; the enforcement of laws against monopolies and trade restraints; open rail pathway to developed docks; inland waterway improvement; home rule for cities; tariff revision to end favoritism and pillage; free foodstuffs and raw materials and broad progress of reciprocity.

Republican Candidate Suffers in the Argument of the Governor.

"This platform appeals to all classes of people more forcibly and intelligently than the platform of any party in many years. As a candidate for Lieutenant-Governor on the Democratic ticket, I stand upon this platform and I am pleading for these principles.

The Point at Issue.

"The Republican platform is a long diffuse document and in all its array of glowing phraseology, it makes but four constructive points, three of which are not in the least degree in dispute; it calls upon the American people to suppress lynching; it promises to continue to improve roads and harbors and parks and promote technical education; it promises to promote the public health and protect the toiler from the dangers of modern industry. Every citizen of the Commonwealth favors these principles. None of these questions are at issue or ever will be in any State election in Massachusetts.

"This platform, after enumerating these undisputed principles and pointing with pride to the grand old party's glorious past and to viewing the enemy with alarm, takes up the tariff issue and declares it is in favor of the downward revision of outworn or oppressive tariff schedules on tariff board information.

"The only point at issue, then, on the constructive parts of the two platforms is the question as to how the tariff shall be revised. The whole campaign, so far as the tariff issue is concerned, turns on that one point. Shall the tariff be reduced by Congress in its own way or must it wait for an expert opinion? I believe in securing all the information that can be obtained; that the government should employ men to investigate conditions of manufacture and labor everywhere in the civilized world, get all the knowledge it can and apply it—but this talk about taking the tariff out of politics is simply for the purpose of making political capital for the present campaign only. What hope can the people place in a tariff commission, judging by past experiences?

Tariff Board Failure.

"The Republicans once had a tariff board. It performed its work with great zeal and ardor; it traveled more than 7,000 miles, taking testimony of witnesses, visited nearly all the large cities of the country and heard the statements of more than 600 persons interested in the subject and submitted more than 2,500 printed pages of evidence, together with a recommendation that the duties were from 20 to 25 per cent. too high, and that they should be reduced.

"The National House of Representatives considered this report, amended it and sent it to the Senate, and there the tariff barons got in their work, as they always do. Refusing to accept the recommendations of the tariff commission, the Senate passed a measure increasing the average duties more than 5 per cent., instead of lowering them 20 or 25 per cent. in accordance with the findings of this tariff commission.

"So much for the Republican tariff commission of thirty years ago. Is there the slightest reason to believe that the Republicans of to-day are any more sincere than they were then? They have no idea of revising the tariff downward if it can possibly be avoided. Unless we force their hand by electing a Democratic Congress and as many other Democratic officials as possible in State and nation, they will accept the results as in favor, not of revision downward as they have frequently promised and so often failed to accomplish, but as in favor of a continued high protective tariff.

Low Rate of Wages.

"Republicans argue that the tariff should be taken out of politics. How can it most effectively be done? The only way to take the tariff out of politics is to reduce it immediately to a consistent and stable basis, with the understanding that it shall remain there and under no circumstances is it to be increased. The country has had quite enough of the agitation, the sole cause of which is a high protective tariff, fostered by Republican statesmen,—a majority of whom have for years been merely agents of the protected interests.

"Massachusetts is one of the most progressive States in the Union, and at the same time one of the most highly protected so far as its leading industries are concerned, and yet it has thousands and thousands of people who are earning less than a normal rate of wage. Making due allowance for unemployment, it is safe to say that half of the men workers of the country are making less than $500 a year, whereas it is considered that $900 is the minimum on which a man can support a family under normal conditions.

WHY NOT HAVE STRONG NERVES?

Nervous Debility Is Preventable and Curable as This Ohio Case Proves.

Mrs. G. E. Neu, of No. 504 Oak street, Elmwood Place, Ohio, was led to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People by her husband after being in a nervous and run-down condition for over two years. She says:

"It was quite a good while before I was aware that I was suffering from nervous debility for I have always had a strong constitution. Through worry and loss of sleep due to the sickness of my children, I began to notice that I was getting nervous and was always tired. I got so that I would fly to pieces over any excitement and could not bear any noise, even that made by the children in playing. I had constant headaches back of my eyes and quite often was dizzy. My hands and feet were always cold and neither friction nor heat would warm them. I had no appetite and could not go upstairs without stopping to rest.

"I was complaining for over two years and often called in the doctor but he didn't help me. My husband had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People some years before and was constantly urging me to try them. Finally to please him I consented to give the pills a trial. Before I had taken many boxes I felt better and then was only too glad to continue using them. I soon noticed that I could go upstairs without stopping for breath and that my hands and feet were warm. When my friends would ask me what I was taking I never lost a chance to praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The pills restored my health and I wonder how any one suffering from a blood or nervous disease, can neglect to take them. I hope my experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills may induce others to give them a trial."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are useful in a wide range of diseases of the blood and nerves such as rheumatism, after-effects of the grip and fevers, neuralgia, nervous debility, St. Vitus' dance and even partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are for sale by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

Great Improvement in Dentistry

SUCCESSFUL RESULTS OBTAINED BY USING NEW STYLE PORCELAIN TEETH IN BRIDGE-WORK

This has been accomplished by the DENTISTS of the WHITE DENTAL PARLORS at 523 Washington st., Boston.

The old idea of using gold, now being done away with.

The reason that bridge work usually looks artificial in the mouth is on account of the teeth being backed up with gold. With these bridges so little gold is used that the teeth are transparent as natural ones and cannot be detected.

Those in need of this kind of work should not fail to call on these DENTISTS and have the subject carefully explained to them, and also see samples of the work, which will convince them that it is far the best style of work yet introduced into the Dental profession.

Anyone interested in their personal appearance and good health should not fail to investigate this method.

You are cordially invited to call on these DENTISTS and have a talk with them. All advice is gladly given FREE of CHARGE at any time.

This work is an idea of their own and cannot be accomplished by other dentists.

In addition to this work they still continue to do all kinds of FILLINGS, PAINLESS EXTRACTING, and make artificial teeth, AT THE FORMER PRICES.

Only EXPERIENCED and CAPABLE DENTISTS, and satisfaction is GUARANTEED in all work.

This office is the most reliable and longest established in the city. Over 18 years at 523 Washington St., opp. R. H. White's.

All the patients of this office are sending their friends, the work being so satisfactory.

MILL PRESIDENT OUT FOR FOSS

Walter H. Langshaw, president of the Dartmouth Mills in New Bedford, in the course of a vigorous statement favoring the re-election of Governor Foss, says the vital thing to be accomplished is the overthrow of what he calls the corrupt trading combine, which now dominates the Republican party. He thinks that Democratic success in Massachusetts this year will almost immediately bring this result about, and that then a general reduction of the tariff upon fair and scientific lines, free from favoritism and log rolling, would soon be accomplished.

Mr. Langshaw's declaration has caused consternation among the other mill men in New Bedford, who appreciate the tremendous significance of his statement. In an article in a weekly publication Mr. Langshaw is quoted as saying, the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, with its increased duties on high grade cotton goods, has been the cause of an unhealthy and unnatural expansion of cotton manufacturing in Massachusetts, promoters having used it as an argument to induce capitalists to build new mills, whereby the competition is so great that the prices of cotton goods have fallen since the passage of the bill, being at all times considerably below the cost of importing the goods, so that the duty has been actually prohibitive.

Made Mills Cost More.

Mr. Langshaw does not consider that the Underwood bill would have destroyed the cotton manufacturing interests of Massachusetts, but it would have been a severe blow, and if certain compensating changes in the tariff had not followed, it would have caused a permanent shrinkage of investment values, accompanied by a material lowering of wages.

President Langshaw, in adding to the quoted interview, said:

"The election of Mr. Foss will be an indirect benefit in so far as it would be a lesson to Republicans and tend to lessen the power of the machine. I am not in favor of Frothingham because he represents the machine."

William W. Crapo, president of the Wamsutta Mills, said: "The views of Mr. Langshaw are at variance with those of all the other mill managers of New Bedford. He does not represent on this question the views of the operatives or of the stockholders of our mills, and it would be difficult for him to frame a cotton schedule satisfactory to himself, although he is critical of others.

Crapo Assails Langshaw.

"It will not be difficult for Mr. Frothingham to point out the fallacies in Mr. Langshaw's statement. They contradict and neutralize each other. He makes assertions that on the face of them are incorrect when he says that the Payne-Aldrich bill 'has been the cause of an unhealthy and unnatural expansion of cotton manufacturing in Massachusetts.' Mr. Langshaw must know that practically all of the cotton mills were built before the Payne-Aldrich bill was passed. The tariff act, in operation only a very short time, could not have brought about the construction of any mills.

STATE SCORES IN M'NAMARA CASE

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 24.—When the McNamara trial was resumed to-day only ten of the original 125 veniremen were left.

By denying a challenge by the defence against Talesman George W. McKee, based on the ground that while McKee had no prejudice against James B. McNamara, the defendant, he believed the Los Angeles Times building was blown up by dynamite, Judge Bordwell upset a cherished contention of the defence.

The ruling was based upon the court's belief that notwithstanding McKee's opinion he could and would be a fair and impartial juror. Of this the court is the sole judge. Whether other jurors of McKee's frame of mind would be disqualified depended, the court pointed out, upon the individual instances and not upon any general ruling.

The defence held that under its contention that the Times explosion was caused by gas a man ought to believe that theory or none at all to be an impartial juror, and after the court had announced his ruling McNamara's counsel still argued earnestly against it.

Edward Nickols, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor, arrived here and called upon the McNamara brothers. He talked a long time with John G. McNamara. It was said that he brought evidence which he believed of value to the defence.

Speculation has been caused by a report that the prosecution would ask Judge Bordwell to swear in fourteen jurors before the taking of testimony begins, the last two selected to act as alternates. As the trial is expected to last for several months, this method, if adopted, it is believed, will eliminate much of the danger of a mistrial in case of sickness or death or disqualification for other cause of any of the jurors.

It was said to-day that a detective from the William J. Burns agency has been in Holyoke, Mass., twice within a month looking after evidence relating to the attempted dynamiting of the underpass bridge on Jackson street, October 15, 1908.

HELP SUMMONED BY DISABLED TOWBOAT

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 24.—Distress signals, blown loud and long off Price's Neck early to-day, brought out the life-saving crew and the tug Robert Palmer. They found the wrecking tug Harriott, which had lost a screw and was helpless. The Palmer took the Harriott in tow for New York.

SHOTS HALT TWO ACCUSED LADS

By firing his revolver several times into the air, Patrolman Martin S. Cosgrove of the East Dedham street station brought to a halt two boys he is alleged to have caught breaking into the liquor store of W. H. Cotter & Co. at No. 565 Tremont street, South End, early to-day. The chase led for several blocks along Tremont street and Cosgrove did not resort to his gun until he thought the pair were going to separate.

At the station house the boys gave their names as John Connolly, nineteen, of No. 2 Merton place, Roxbury, and Morgan Holley, fifteen, of No. 4 Dayton avenue, Roxbury. They were charged with breaking and entering and the larceny of two bottles of champagne.

Cosgrove was on Tremont street when he heard the crash of glass and says he saw the boys making away from in front of Cotter's store with bottles tucked under their arms. The store window was smashed. Cosgrove started in pursuit. He shouted to the boys to stop, but they paid no attention and kept on running. Cosgrove commenced shooting and a score of persons attracted by the shots joined in the chase which came to an abrupt stop when Cosgrove fired.

FRUIIT SHOW DRAWS CROWD

The second biennial New England Fruit Show in Horticultural Hall, held in connection with the Boston Chamber of Commerce New England Industrial Show at Mechanics building, is proving a big success. Visitors to the Fruit Show are admitted to the Industrial Exposition on the same ticket and vice versa. The attendance at both shows has been large.

The co-operation of practically all the fruit growers of New England has resulted in a remarkable display. Apples that excel the Western in flavor, size and beauty as well, pears that are sound and mellow and grapes that melt in the mouth are shown in abundance. All these have been piled high in Horticultural Hall, and demonstrate that New England leads in the science of pomology, just as the New England Industrial Show in Mechanics building proves that she leads in hundreds of other industries.

To-morrow will be "Fitchburg Day" at Mechanics building, when the schools will be closed and many will journey from the sister city to see the great show. Saturday will be "Providence Day."

TRY THIS IF YOU ACHE ALL OVER FROM A BAD COLD OR THE GRIPPE

Nothing else that you can take will break your cold or end grippe so promptly as a dose of Pape's Cold Compound every two hours until three consecutive doses are taken.

The most miserable headache, dullness, head and nose stuffed up, feverishness, sneezing, running of the nose, sore throat, mucous cartarrhal discharges, soreness, stiffness, rheumatism pains and other distress begin to leave after the very first dose.

Pape's Cold Compound is the result of three years' research at a cost of more than fifty thousand dollars and contains no quinine, which we have conclusively demonstrated is not effective in the treatment of colds or grippe.

Take this harmless Compound as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other medicine made anywhere else in the world which will cure your cold or end Grippe misery as promptly and without any other assistance or bad after-effects as a 25-cent package of Pape's Cold Compound, which any druggist in the world can supply.

TARKINGTON DEFENDS WIFE, WHO ASKS DIVORCE

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—"No, I shall not try to prevent my wife winning the suit for divorce which she has brought against me in Indianapolis," said Booth Tarkington, novelist and playwright, at the Princeton Club, Gramercy Park North, last night. "Mrs. Tarkington has made up her mind to get this divorce, and it would not be the part of chivalry to throw any difficulties in her way. I shall not file any answer nor go out there to defend the suit. Her principal complaint is, according to the news dispatches, that 'the defendant for more than five years past has habitually treated her with great cruelty.'

"I have not seen the legal papers yet, though I shall have them in a day or two, I expect. But it is surely due myself that I say by this 'cruelty' she means my wandering habit has been very irksome to her. I have never been physically cruel to her, of course. I think that in some of the Western papers she or her friends give me credit for that—that my cruelty has amounted to what appeared to a home loving woman like neglect.

Often Away From Home.

"You see, the real trouble is that I have been obliged to travel a great deal, going to all sorts of places and among all sorts of people to get material and color for my stories and books. To a woman who loved a home life and a quiet existence this became unbearable with the years, and who can blame her? I see that some paper has quoted her as saying that I have been in the habit of disappearing for a week or ten days at a time and on returning refusing to tell where I had been. That is absolutely false, and the statement never came from her. She is too fine a woman to have said it—for it is not true.

"She asks for the custody of our five-year-old girl, Laurel Louisa Fletcher Tarkington. And I suppose that is right. Her mother is the best one to have the care of her. But no doubt the courts will fix it so that I can see her whenever I wish and can have her with me part of the time. Her mother would want it so, too, I am sure. You see, I am still her father and will want to be her father always, and shall always be ready and anxious to do all I can for her.

"Mrs. Tarkington is a very womanly woman and the little girl's future will be perfectly safe in her hands. She will always have about her an atmosphere of culture and refinement, for my wife herself is a literary person of attainments. Some of her poems are excellent, and she has always been an inspiration to me in my work."

"No Third Person."

"It has been said that Mrs. Tarkington got all ready to go to Europe with you last Summer; that she came to New York with you and that her tickets were bought, and that at the last minute she suddenly changed her mind and refused to go," the reporter said.

"That is not true. It was not expected that she should go to Europe with me. She was to take the little girl and go to the seashore for the Summer. That was what she wanted to do all along, and it was what she did do.

"There is certainly no third person in this misunderstanding. I have no intention of ever marrying again. Once is enough, though I do not consider that our lives have been wrecked by it in any sense, and I shall always hold sacred the memory of our mutual copartnership, with its happy times and it serious times. She certainly made my life broader and deeper and more worth while. But now I feel that I have work to do. I have come back to the city to buckle down and get into the harness as never before. And from what I know of my wife I do not think that she has any intention of marrying again. Life is serious to her, and no doubt the care of our little girl will fill her heart and her days.

"Still Best of Friends."

"So far from there being any serious question beyond my devotion to my work between us, I can truthfully say that we parted with the utmost good feeling and that we are still the best of friends."

"Mrs. Tarkington's friends are quoted as saying that when you came back from Europe a few weeks ago the question of a final separation was still in the air, and that you then sent her word that if she did not sue for separation you would do so yourself. Is that true?" Mr. Tarkington was asked.

"No, it is not," the novelist answered with increasing earnestness. "I have never intended to sue her for separation. There was no reason to do so, and it was furthest from my wish."

TECHNICAL EGGS

By MORTON BIRGE.

One short word is the theme at 'Tech.
It is "E double-G."
Yes—"Egg."

Think of a plant of the size of 'Tech.
Scratching its head till it's bald, by heck!
Buried in eggs to its learned neck—
In eggs.

"When is it fresh?" ask 'Tech men wise.
What do they mean—
An egg?

That's what they ask and they're all torn out.
That's what the furore is all about.
No more peace till they settle the doubt
On eggs.

'Tech asked Egg when an egg is fresh.
"You can search me,"
Says Egg.

Faculty, teachers and 'Tech young men
Poring o'er eggs from both crate and hen
Eggs can be fresh, but the question's—When?
That's eggs.

QUICK AUTOPSY IN DEATH CASE

Medical Examiner Timothy D. Leary established a precedent for post mortem examinations when he performed an autopsy at midnight at the City Hospital morgue upon the body of Mrs. Annie Stockwell of No. 113 Hampshire street, Cambridge, who was found dead in the lodging house at No. 6 Union Park, South End, under circumstances which at first led the police to believe she had been poisoned.

Cornelius Donovan of No. 831 Shawmut avenue, South End, was held at the East Dedham street station pending the result of the autopsy, which showed the woman to have died of alcoholism and lack of proper nourishment. Mrs. Stockwell came to the lodging house conducted by Mrs. Tatro with Donovan a few days ago. A few hours previous to her death she received some ice cream.

Later on Mrs. Tatro went to her room with a boy who called at the house to ascertain her condition and found her lying upon the floor. Dr. Ayer was called and after pronouncing the woman dead called in the police.

The police called Medical Examiner Leary to the house. He was told the facts and ordered the body sent to the morgue.

DOG IN BED LEADS TO FINING HUSBAND

PITTSBURG, Pa., Oct. 24.—Mrs. Theresa Mason insisted that her dog should sleep at the foot of the bed. Hubby Mason was equally insistent that such a thing was silly. The climax came in Magistrate Saam's court when hubby paid $20 for alleged abuse of wifey. He took the poodle by the ears and slammed it against the staircase, but that was only incidental to the wild night put in at the Mason domicile. "When I couldn't get her to listen to reason I guess I did lose my temper," Mason told the magistrate. The latter replied: "Two is company and three is a crowd, and I wouldn't sleep with any dog. At the same time you made too much racket."

DIXIE IV. OWNER NOT TO BLAME FOR CRASH

BUFFALO, N. Y., Oct. 24.—Frederick K. Burnham of New York has been exonerated by Justice Toms of Kenmore, who last week returned a verdict charging the New York man with cowardice and criminal negligence in the wrecking of the famous racing boat Dixie IV. here September 16, when a spectator was fatally injured. Attorneys Ulyssess S. Thomas and John T. McGovern produced photographs taken at the time the Dixie was wrecked, showing that Mr. Burnham was still sticking to his post at the wheel when the boat was a short distance from the shore.

CRANE, ALDRICH, MORGAN ON TRAIN

ST. JOHNSBURY, Vt., Oct. 24. — A special train passed through here on which were J. Pierpont Morgan, ex-Senator Nelson Aldrich of Rhode Island and Senator Crane of Massachusetts. The three were guests over Sunday of Theodore N. Vail at his home, Speedwell Farms, Lyndonville, Vt.

AUTO DRIVER IS HELD FOR DEATH

SALEM, Oct. 24.—Charles W. Chapman, chauffeur, who reported to the police three weeks ago that he found the body of a man on the North Beverly road, was charged in the Salem District court today with manslaughter in being the one who had run this man down. The body was later identified as that of James Gillis of Beverly. The police say they learned that only three automobiles had passed along the North Beverly road on the day in question and that Chapman's car was the one that hit Gillis. Chapman pleaded not guilty and gave $2,000 bonds for appearance November 2.

ALLSTON "BOOSTERS" FIRMLY ORGANIZED

The Allston Business Men's Association, temporary organization of which was perfected Tuesday, met at Odd Fellows Hall, Allston, with an attendance of about twenty-five representative business and professional men, builders and real estate brokers, and voted to make the organization permanent, changing the name to the Allston Development Association. Officers were elected as follows: President, T. B. Munroe; vice-president, N. S. Waite; secretary, H. J. Ward; treasurer, W. G. Pultz; directors, T. A. Sanford, R. G. Jones, James McTigue, Bernard Steuer, Dwight Baldwin, Dr. C. B. Doane and I. P. Staples. A committee to draft by-laws and report at a future meeting was appointed, as follows: Ernest Blasser, Dwight Baldwin and A. P. Sherman.

JACK JOHNSON TOO STRONG FOR DISHES

LONDON, Oct. 24.—John Arthur Johnson, the colored heavyweight champion pugilist, was sued by a woman who rented him a flat in Paddington. She testified that the pugilist because of his unusual strength smashed a large quantity of dishes and furniture. Johnson did not appear in court and was ordered to pay $37 damages.

NEVER SUSPECTED KIDNEY TROUBLE—GAINED FIFTY POUNDS IN WEIGHT

Some time ago I was suffering from what I supposed was rheumatism. I became so bad that I could hardly get on my feet from a sitting position. I ran down in weight from 195 to 145 pounds. I tried different kinds of medicine, but received little or no help. I saw Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root highly recommended for kidney trouble but I never had any idea that my kidneys were affected. I thought I would try a fifty-cent bottle of Swamp-Root and see what the effect would be. I commenced taking it according to directions and in a few days I saw that it was helping me. I used the fifty-cent bottle and then bought three more dollar bottles and they completely cured me. I have gone back to my original weight—195 pounds—and I am a thorough advocate of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, as I believe it to be a remarkable preparation for what it is recommended to do.

WILLIAM H. PARTCH,
New Haven, Vt.

Personally appeared before me this 4th day of September, 1909, Wm. H. Partch, who subscribed the above statement and made oath that the same is true in substance and in fact. D. A. ROLEAU, Justice of the Peace.

Letter to
Dr. Kilmer & Co.,
Binghamton, N. Y.

Prove What Swamp-Root Will Do For You

Send to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. It will convince anyone. You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling all about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention the Boston Daily American. Regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles for sale at all drug stores.

A HARMLESS WAY TO DARKEN HAIR. SAGE AND SULPHUR MAKES GRAY HAIR VANISH.

Who does not know the value of sage and sulphur for keeping the hair dark, soft, glossy and in good condition? As a matter of fact, sulphur is a natural element of hair, and a deficiency of it in the hair is held by many scalp specialists to be connected with loss of color and vitality of the hair. Unquestionably, there is no better remedy for hair and scalp troubles, especially premature grayness, than sage and sulphur, if properly compounded. The Wyeth Chemical Company of New York put up an ideal remedy of this kind, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, and authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

If you have dandruff, or if your hair is thin or turning gray, get a bottle of this remedy from your druggist to-day and see what it will do for you.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

POISON CASE TO GRAND JURY

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 24.—Developments in the case of Allison MacFarland, now in the Essex County jail at Newark, charged with being responsible for the death of his wife, led Prosecutor Mott to announce that he believed himself justified in submitting the case to the grand jury to-day. The prosecutor pressed for an indictment for murder in the first degree.

The one link in the chain necessary to bind the man—the discovery of a possible motive—has, in the official opinion, been supplied. That link was not forged from a packet of letters alleged to have been written by Florence Bromley, the pretty young stenographer of Philadelphia, but by admissions of the prisoner himself.

This makes Miss Bromley a vital witness for the prosecution and the second figure of importance in the case. So far she has declined to hold any communication with the Newark authorities, and a detective who went to her Philadelphia home from Prosecutor Mott was turned away from the door.

Every legal expedient will be used to get the young woman to Newark. She cannot be compelled to answer a subpoena from New Jersey while in Pennsylvania. The detective who called upon her returned to Newark by the way of Trenton last night. While at the capital he conferred with the authorities, but declined to say to what purpose. What course can be taken short of a drastic proceeding is not known.

Letters in Case.

The theory of the case upon which Jersey justice will seek the life of the keen, cool, alert man, now behind the bars, is unequalled in the criminal records of the State, and perhaps the country. It can be summed up as follows:

MacFarland for two years has been in love with pretty Miss Bromley, once a stenographer in his office in Philadelphia. From the packet of letters it is apparent that the young woman was deeply in love with him. Passages in a letter indicate that in case anything happened to separate the MacFarlands she believed she would become his wife.

The domestic life of the MacFarlands was not happy. Virtually for more than two years they had agreed to disagree. He thought she was extravagant; she thought he neglected her. To such an extent did this disagreement go that within a year they had seriously thought of a divorce. He wanted her to appeal to the courts of her native State—Maine. The idea was abandoned because MacFarland would not consent to supply a cause unless it was agreed that he should have the custody of his six-year-old son, Robert, whom he idolizes.

Bought Cyanide.

The domestic experiences of husband and wife because of the situation was almost intolerable. The husband was frequently absent from home over night, often stopping at the St. Paul Hotel in Manhattan. Usually he was accompanied by his son.

Mrs. MacFarland was a sufferer from headaches, due to a highly nervous condition. Her favorite remedy was a preparation of bromide of potassium, which she kept in a bottle on a shelf of her bedroom closet. To this she could go in the dark when suffering, pouring the crystals into a teaspoon and from that into a glass on her dressing table. This glass would be half-full of water.

It is admitted that MacFarland procured a quantity of cyanide of potassium from the factory of Crockett-Wheeler Company, manufacturers of electrical machinery, at Ampere, N. J., by which company he was employed as an advertising or publicity agent. He declares that he procured this for his wife to clean jewelry or silverware.

Prosecutor Silent.

The theory of the police and of the prosecutor is that MacFarland substituted cyanide of potassium for the bromide, replacing the bottle as it had been; that matters were so contrived that on Tuesday night, October 17, Mrs. MacFarland made two discoveries which threw her into a highly nervous state from which a violent headache resulted.

One was the discovery of a letter which told her that property and jewels held in Michigan had been sold for debt. The other was the finding of a letter or letters which indicated that her husband had been unfaithful to her.

COMPANY GIVES OWN AUTO SHOW

By J. C. KERRISON.

It was a happy thought that lead the management of the Buick Motor Company to determine upon the holding of an independent automobile show some four months prior to the big exhibit held annually in Mechanics Building. This private show was inaugurated yesterday morning and will continue throughout the week.

The first day's attendance was far greater than was anticipated—interested vititors moving in and out of the show room, which has been turned into a veritable garden, all day long and in the evening. At least fifty people were in the sales room when the writer visited it yesterday afternoon, and Mr. Johnson said that it was but a fair sample of what had been experienced all day.

Some idea of the interest that is taken in the show and the various models exhibited can be gained from the fact that the demand for demonstrations was so great that it was necessary to enforce the rule of giving no demonstration lasting over a period of thirty minutes. No less than forty-two demonstrations had been given before 2 o'clock yesterday.

The showroom presented a particularly tasteful appearance—potted plants being displayed in profusion, but not sufficiently so as to destroy or in any way detract from the effectiveness of the various Buick models shown. A display of commercial cars was made on the second floor of the Park square building, while the pleasure cars had the entire ground floor to themselves.

With the first day that boxes were put on sale for the Vanderbilt and Grand Prize races during Thanksgiving week, fifty-two boxes were reserved. There was also a great rush for reserved seats, and the advance sale of these, as well as the boxes, was more than twice as on the first day of the sale for the two previous Grand Prize races, indicating that the races this year will be much more largely attended than the previous ones. Harvey Granger, president of the Savannah Automobile Club, has charge of the sale of boxes, while reservations should be made through S. E. Theus, chairman, at Savannah. Every mail is heavy with requests for boxes and seats.

Frank E. Wing makes the announcement that there will be two Marmon cars in the seventh Vanderbilt Cup race at Savannah on November 27. The cars will be Marmon "Thirty-Sixes," practically the same as the regular production of the Indianapolis factory with the exception of a larger motor.

One of the Marmons will be driven by "Bob" Burman, "Speed King," and holder of many world's records, and the other will have as its pilot Joe Dawson, runner-up in the famous race last year. Lap for lap, Dawson made the fastest time to which any car has ever been driven in a Vanderbilt race, averaging 67.44 miles per hour for the distance, but a delay of several minutes caused by his car striking a spectator in the eighteenth lap lost him the contest by the margin of twenty-five seconds.

Dawson figures that both he and his team-mate, Burman, can surpass his time of last year and that the seventeen laps, or 289 miles, will be run at an average of better than seventy miles per hour.

In the Savannah Challenge race, 231-300 class, to be run on the same day, there will be two Marmon "Thirty-Two" cars entered. Cyrus Patschke, the famous twenty-four-hour driver, who acted as relief pilot for Ray Harroun in the victorious Marmon during the International Sweepstakes 500 miles race at Indianapolis on May 30, will be one of the pilots, and Joe Nikrent, who has won many races at the Pacific Coast, will be at the wheel of the other Marmon.

Another strategic move for the future of the automobile industry was made Saturday when R. M. Lockwood of New York, head of the foreign department of the Regal Motor Car Company of Detroit, set sail for a trip around the world in the interests of his company. Not since the birth of the automobile industry has such a trip been undertaken, for not only will Mr. Lockwood visit the principal cities of Europe, but he will continue on through the Orient and return to this country by way of San Francisco. He expects to be gone for about five months.

Stifling Invention!

MR. ANDERSON says that "progress in Shoe Machinery has practically been stopped" by the United Shoe Machinery Company. Read how it has been done:

1. The Company has spent all the way from $250,000 to $750,000 in experiment and development of new machines every year since it was formed.

2. IT HAS MADE WORKABLE OVER ONE HUNDRED DIFFERENT NEW MACHINES, some of which perform operations formerly performed by hand and all of which are far better than those formerly in use. Taken in connection with reduction in royalties, shoe manufacturers by their use effect a saving of nearly 9 cents in the cost of making a pair of Goodyear Welt Shoes.

3. A GREATER NUMBER OF PRACTICAL PATENTS IN SHOE MACHINERY HAVE BEEN MADE EFFECTIVE IN THE PAST TWELVE YEARS THAN IN ANY OTHER PERIOD OF EQUAL LENGTH SINCE SHOEMAKING BEGAN.

4. One machine alone cost the Company years of time and over $1,000,000 in money before it would work. It would not be in the shoe factories of Massachusetts today if it had been left to an individual inventor to make it go.

5. THIRTY-FIVE OF THESE NEW MACHINES are in actual operation this week in the Model Shoe Factory at the New England Fair.

6. Mr. Anderson can find them there. He will find over each machine a large, plainly printed card telling on just what terms EVERY shoe manufacturer can use it, and he can take home a little book to read giving in detail the name of each machine in this exhibit and the terms on which it is sold or leased.

TRIBESMEN IN WAR ON ITALY

PERA, via Tripoli, Oct. 24.—Ten thousand Tuareg tribesmen, the most warlike of the desert warrior tribesmen, have joined the Mohammedan holy war against the Italians, and are marching northward to join the Crescent. Commander Deshat of the Turkish army to-day made this announcement.

Sheiks of the Tuareg tribes, all bound to the Ottoman by ties of religion, are rousing their followers to the height of religious frenzy. They threaten to sweep northward over the African deserts and put to the sword every Christian who falls into their power.

PARIS, Oct. 24.—A dispatch from Rome to the newspaper Echo de Paris to-day states that a proposal has been submitted at Rome for an immediate armistice between Italy and Turkey. The dispatch adds that the Italian government has signified its willingness to enter upon immediate peace negotiations, providing Turkey will pledge herself meantime to end all measures directed against the trade carried on by Italian subjects.

MALTA, Oct. 24.—It is reported here that the Italian casualties in the attack on and capture of Benghazi greatly exceeded the official figures.

The estimate received by officials here is that the losses to the Italians reached 1,200 and it seems likely that this figure is not greatly exaggerated. Enver Bey is said to be in command of the Turks and Benghazi.

SUFFRAGISTS IN STORMY SESSION

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN.

American Correspondent at National Suffrage Convention.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 24.—Dr. Anna Shaw has been re-elected President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association by unanimous vote. Mrs. Richard Y. FitzGerald, the Boston Suffragist, was elected to the national board as recording secretary, succeeding Miss K. S. Steward of Chicago. Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, a former Bostonian, now living in New York, was re-elected corresponding secretary.

Miss Jane Addams of Hull House and Miss Sophonisba Breckenridge, a Kentucky woman, who is a professor in Chicago University, were elected first and second vice-presidents. And this is where the papers have stumbled over a big surprise. Chicago has landed the two most important officers next to the chief executive. It was a dark horse election of the cleverest type.

Criticism and grumbling has shrouded the convention like a fog for three days. Everybody was dissatisfied but no one seemed to know just why. Rumors skuttled about mysteriously.

Personalities Exchanged.

"Dr. Shaw would be re-elected." "She would not." "An entirely new slate would be put through." "It would not." And so forth.

Then came a session, which some of the delegates say is a blot on the convention. Personalities were hurled across the room. Half a dozen women were talking at once. Dr. Shaw's gavel and rulings were ignored. One woman wept.

It was almost as bad as some of the men's conventions I have attended. After three hours solid wrangling they managed to pass an amendment to an amendment, which finally proved to be the original bone of contention.

Luncheon mercifully intervened. Perhaps it was the luncheon. Anyhow, the delegates returned to the hall and seated themselves under their State placards, all except the College Equal Suffrage League delegation, which has a little placard of its own attached to the back of M. Carey Thomas's chair, she being the President of Bryn Mawr.

Quietly, almost grimly, they forged past a few digressions, on to business. The informal ballot for president came in with an overwhelming majority for Dr. Shaw, and Miss Laura Clay of Kentucky, the next candidate, moved that the secretary be instructed to cast the unanimous vote of the convention for Dr. Shaw.

New Hampshire Campaign.

The informal ballot for first vice-president came in with another overwhelming majority for Jane Addams, and with a persistence that had become monotonous by that time, a third overwhelming majority bobbed up for Miss Sophonisba Breckenridge as second vice-president. The smaller delegations and the Western States looked around in astonishment.

It was more than a coincidence, it was a contraption. But as a matter of fact, the secret of it was very simple. New York has fifty-six votes, Massachusetts has twenty and M. Carey Thomas delivers twenty-six for the College Equal Suffrage League, while the convention totals less than 300 votes.

There were other surprises in the elections, but they were smaller. Miss Jessie Ashley of New York was re-elected treasurer, and two new auditors were elected, Mrs. LaFollette of Wisconsin, wife of the Insurgent Senator, and Mrs. James Lee Laidlaw of New York.

HISTORIC NORTH CHURCH CLOSED

Christ Church on Salem street, popularly known as the Old North Church, in the belfry of which hung the signal lanterns for Paul Revere, was closed to the public to-day. It will remain closed for several months, during which time new furnaces will be installed, the present being so old and defective that there is danger of the historical edifice being destroyed by fire.

Coincident with the information concerning the closing of the church, which has been a mecca for tourists for a century, comes the announcement that Bishop Lawrence, after having made vain attempts in this direction for years, has finally succeeded in getting a proprietory interest in the church.

The transaction was completed, transferring to Bishop Lawrence and to ten other men whom he had suggested individual shares in the ownership of the church. Henceforth the sixteen former members of the church corporation and the eleven new members will be in control.

When this question of ownership was disposed of, it was decided to close the church. The furnaces were found to be in such a condition as to threaten the edifice with destruction by fire. It was also found that the structure needed repairs from within and without, having been neglected in this direction.

SANDFORD FLOCK FORCED ASHORE

SHILOH, Me., Oct. 24.—Hilltop, the headquarters of the Holy Ghost and Us Society, is again occupied. The Rev. Frank W. Sandford, his family and those of his flock who returned with him from the sensational cruise of the yacht Coronet, arrived here after being forced to land at South Freeport. Sandford is undecided as to his future movements.

The landing of the Shilohites was a forced one. Following a visit to the Coronet by Mary S. Burnham, an officer of the Children's Protective Board, Deputy Sheriff Fickett and other officials, Rev. Frank W. Sandford, leader of the Shilohites, with his wife and family and the majority of his followers, left the boat and headed for this place.

Their hurried departure was due in a large measure to the fact that the authorities, after viewing the ship, ordered all of the children removed to land at once. Even Sandford's children were included.

The Coronet was in a condition almost impossible to describe, according to statements made by members of the boarding party.

In addition to Mrs. Burnham, who is police matron of Portland as well as an officer of the children's society, and Deputy Sheriff Fickett, there was in the party Dr. Fred H. L. Webster of Portland, a specialist on the diseases of children, and Constable John Ineson of Freeport.

When the party appeared alongside of the Coronet in a launch and asked to be allowed to board they were refused by Sailing Master Whittom. The officers showed their badges and demanded that they be allowed aboard, and after a conference with Captain A. K. Perry, Whittom decided to give the desired permission.

Sandford was on board, but he had no words with the visitors, and all the time that they were there he walked the deck in company with Rev. Charles E. Holland, the "Moses" of the flock.

PLEDGE LOYALTY IN MARY GARDEN ROW

BANGOR, Me., Oct. 24.—Charles J. Wardley and John L. Parker, members of the executive committee of the Eastern Maine Musical Festival Association, when interviewed in regard to the resignation of Director William R. Chapman and Mrs. Chapman after the Mary Garden concert in Portland, said they had received no notice of the resignations. At the annual meeting of the Portland Festival Chorus, a resolution was adopted expressing regret at the trouble on the closing night of the festival and pledging loyalty to W. R. Chapman, the director.

JONES FREED ON FAKE POOLROOM CHARGE

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 24.—James T. Jones of Boston was found not guilty of the charge of larceny of $7,500 from Samuel Butter, a Boston junk dealer in this city on July 18 last. The jury deliberated two hours.

The trial of William C. Crane on the same charge will be held Thursday. The men, with Charles Kane and "Big Lem" Strosneider, the last two being still at large, were charged with working the fake pool room game on Butter. Jones's defence was he knew nothing of the operations of his companions.

RIDGWAY KNIGHT'S SON DEAD IN FRANCE

PARIS, Oct. 24.—A son of Ridgway Knight, the American artist, died suddenly here. The young man had been serving his term in the army and came home on a visit. He complained of a headache and obtained a sleeping potion at a drug store. He took this before retiring and was found dead in bed. It is supposed the druggist made a mistake in preparing the medicine.

BRING WALSH'S BODY TO BOSTON

Special Agent Schmidt of the Federal Department of Justice, has begun an investigation to officially determine whether the Martin J. Walsh who died in New York is actually the leader of the faro gang whose operations were revealed in the National City Bank cases.

In the meanwhile the body is at an undertaker's on Tremont street and Mrs. Walsh will have it sent to Peabody for burial, so there is no doubt in the minds of Boston acquaintances of Walsh that the faro king, who had long been hunted by the police, is dead.

Peabody is the home of Mrs. Walsh, who was Grace Baldwin. Various members of the Baldwin family are buried there, and Walsh will be interred there also. Since the disappearance of her husband Mrs. Walsh has made her home on Newbury street, Boston. She formerly lived in luxurious apartments at No. 144 Huntington avenue.

Coroner Holtzhauser is quoted in New York dispatches as saying he is perfectly satisfied as to the identity of Walsh. He said that L. H. Snell, in whose apartments at No. 1730 Broadway Walsh died, admitted that Walsh was the man sought relative to the looting of the Cambridge bank.

A number of men who were on good terms with "Big Bill" Kelliher, Martin J. Walsh and other members of the gang of confidence men who used George W. Coleman as a tool in looting the National City Bank of Cambridge, will breathe easier when it is positively known that Walsh was the man who died suddenly in New York.

WOMEN ARE LOSING THEIR LITTLE TOES

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 24.—"Tight shoes are slowly but surely transforming American women into snakes," is the startling statement attributed to Professor Franz Bergman, late of the University of Breslau, Germany. "For instance," added the professor, "the American woman is doomed to lose the little toe on each foot—the pedal 'pinkie'—unless she takes to wearing larger shoes. Tight shoes, by deforming the great and little toes, retard the circulation. Slower circulation means colder blood. Colder blood is a progress toward the reptilian characteristics."

ATTACK OF SNEEZING FATAL TO MRS. KOBER

NEWBURG, Oct. 24.—Mrs. Philip Kober of this city died in St. Luke's Hospital here as the result of a violent attack of sneezing some days ago. The sneezing was continued until it produced difficulty in the middle ear, and this caused an abscess on the brain.

WHY SOCIETY WOMEN WASH THEIR OWN HAIR

Mrs. Mae Martyn, writing for the Denver Call, says: "Society has taken to home shampooing for only one reason, and that is to save their natural hair. Most hair dressers insist on shampooing with soap jelly, which in time will ruin any head of hair. The alkali in soap bleaches and dulls the hair, causing it to split, become brittle and fall out.

"Society women avoid these conditions by washing their own hair with a teaspoonful of canthrox dissolved in a cup of hot water. This simple, inexpensive shampoo cleanses perfectly, dries quickly without any ill effects and leaves the hair very soft, lustrous and fluffy. Only a few minutes are required for one of these perfect, delightful shampoos."

HARVARD HOLDS SECRET PRACTICE FOR BROWN GAME

the long delay has brought about all hands were ready to admit that the struggle this afternoon was vital for both teams and the rival managers, realizing this, injected all the ginger possible into the players.

Athletics Rule Favorites.

There was little betting. In what was done the Athletics ruled favorites on the outcome of the series while even money was the rule on the result of to-day's game. At last, a game. The fans lined up early at Shibe Park to snap up whatever bleacher seats could be had.

"The boys are in good shape and ready to face the Giants," said Manager Mack this morning. "The weather is a trifle chilly for the fans but not too chilly for the kind of game we are going to put up."

"The Athletics," Manager McGraw said, "have not won this series yet by a long shot. We confidently expect to come out of this game with an even break behind us."

Although a big contingent of fans was expected from New York the advance guard was considerably smaller than on the occasion of the last game played here. The big stadium of Shibe Park was again gaily decorated, the rain having spoiled the trappings which were hung ten days ago.

MATHEWSON AND BENDER CONFIDENT OF VICTORY TO-DAY

By DAMON RUNYON.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 24.—Just as everybody was half out of rumors the sun came slinking in apologetically, and announced that it had not taken the veil as was commonly supposed. From all that can be gathered it was discreetly absenting itself in districts where he gets more advertising as climatic adjunct than he does around the Far East, and now comes back just in time to dry all that soiled linen which they have been washing around here in rain water and which now hangs soggily from the clothes lines of both leagues.

The complexion of the diamond at Shibe Park is still a trifle muddy, but they are gradually sopping up the dew and giving the ground a thorough manicuring so that it may be able to sit up and support a ball player by to-day.

The Giants, which is the baseball club that came over here from New York to play the Athletics, took a little exercise to-day on the National League grounds, under the direction of John J. McGraw, and looked the better for it.

Matty Against Indian.

Mathewson vs. Bender is the forecast of the weather for manana, and "Big City" says he feels like he might win a game if the boys don't hit him too hard. Albertus Bender, the Chippewa cyclone, exclaimed "Ditto," and let it go at that, being very laconic by nature.

The Gotham delegation is again voting from the Majestic Hotel, the last wanderer having returned early this morning. They all think they have had the best of the lay-off, and it seems reasonable to presume that Mathewson and Marquard have both been benefited, and they are the men upon whom the series depends. The left-hander will very likely be the McGraw choice to work the fifth game at the Polo Grounds.

Some pitchers after a considerable lay-off have trouble with their control, but it is unlikely that Mathewson will be bothered in that respect. Matty has a copyright on control that layoffs cannot infringe upon. The same is true of Bender. The big Indian always manages to keep the ball on the plate, and Connie Mack did not lie awake worrying about the matter last night.

Ban B. Johnson, president of the American League, went away out to Chicago and issued an interview in which he "bawled out" the New York management for the way the tickets were handled for the series in that city. While admitting that Mr. Johnson had a license to feel exasperated if he felt so disposed, some followers of the American League in this city suggested that a gentleman who lives in a glass house should beware of mirrors. They point out that some tickets found their way into the hands of speculators right here.

Criticize Ebbetts.

There seems to be some disposition to criticize Hon. Charles Ebbetts of the Brooklyn club, for the delay in playing the series, the charge being made that but for Mr. Ebbetts' allegiance to Christopher Columbus, the games would have been over long ago. In 1905 the series ended October 14; in 1906 on October 14; in 1907 on October 12; in 1908 on October 14; in 1909 on October 16; and in 1910 on October 23.

The postponement yesterday, therefore, finds but three games played at a time when the series closed last year.

Still, Mr. Ebbets should not be unduly taken to task. He was guided by the most patriotic motives and should be given proper honor therefor.

The National Commission is admitting that it sold the moving picture privileges which promised to furnish the small scandal for a time, and that it received $3,500 for the privilege. This money goes to the National Commission treasury. It is argued that if it were divided among the ball players the sum that each member of the winning club would receive would be too small to consider.

Operated for Loss.

It is further pointed out that the commission has been operating at a loss for years and that it has done an enormous amount of good for ball players. The matter may be dismissed with a very few words. The only persons interested in any of the world's series money are the ball players and the management of the two clubs.

If the ballplayers don't care to protect themselves that is their own loss. If, however, as has been the general impression, the world's series are operated for the benefit of the players, the National Commission will please pardon the mild suggestion that it is no more entitled to the moving picture money, be it forty dollars or forty cents, than it is the salary of a ball ground gate keeper unless the players themselves give it into their august keeping.

Athletics Practice.

The Athletics indulged in a little practice yesterday the same as the Giants and the members of the club are in good spirits and good condition. The series really starts all over again with the game to-day. It is said that the base paths and the outfield will be a little soft, but the Giants have proved about as good in the mud as the next club during the past season.

Garry Hermann, chairman of the National Commission, and a mighty able fellow when it comes to the administration of baseball affairs, spiked the story that the world's series might be transferred. Mr. Herrmann not only declared that the games will be played just as planned in Philadelphia and New York, but they will be played this and succeeding years.

All this talk of there being no more meetings between the winning clubs of the two big leagues has been idle. The fans would insist upon a Fall series, now that they have had a taste of them for some years past and after all it is the fan upon whom baseball depends, now and for all time.

Ames, Crandall and Wiltse pitched to the Giants in practice at the local National League park yesterday afternoon and the club got a good hitting workout. The pitchers put "something on the ball" and if the Giants are able to hit to-day as they did yesterday their batting averages ought to be livened up a bit. Mathewson and Marquard warmed up with Chief Meyers. Mathewson's arm seems in perfect condition, although he merely lobbed the ball up. Marquard cut loose with his speed and caused Manager McGraw to smile.

Over at the American League park the Athletics went through the same course. Mack had his men out for two hours. Danforth, Martin and Coombs served for the batters. Baker, the home-run artist, was the star of the occasion. In five successive turns at the bat he drove the ball into the foyers out at right field, and once sent the ball over the right field fence. Oldring, who has been absent, attending his sister's funeral, took part in the practice. He will play to-morrow.

Bender and Plank warmed up with Thomas and Lapp. It would not be surprising to see Mack send Kennebunk Jack back to-day.

The sun shone brightly all day for the first time since Monday, October 16, and a northeast wind set in which ought to help in drying up the field. The diamond is in fair coldition, while big sponges are used to sup up the puddles in the outfield. It looks like the clubs will surely be able to play to-day.

M'GRAW AND MACK ARE BOTH CERTAIN OF WINNING TO-DAY

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 24.—"Alright. Be alright." Connie Mack, chieftain of the Athletics, was as busy as he could be directing the sponging of Shibe Park by an army of workmen yesterday, when he said the above. With buckets and sponges they sopped up every bit of water possible, and the chieftain took a hand in it himself.

"Grounds are pretty bad, but we'll have 'em all right for the game. None of us wants to wait until the snow flies to finish up these games. The boys are pretty well rested up, and we ought to be ready for the Giants. They are rested up, too, which is a mighty big advantage to them, but I guess we can handle 'em." All the rest of the Athletics feel the same way.

"John McGraw was asked for a statement shortly after he arose after a sound night's sleep, which also was indulged in by all the Giant players. He was captured in the dining room of the Majestic Hotel in the act of devouring some hashed brown potatoes and a luscious looking order of Spring chicken. He arranged some potatoes on the edge of his plate in artistic design, then he said:

"We're gonna win, that's all," and that's all he said.

BAN JOHNSON SAYS TICKET SCALPING WAS SCANDALOUS

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—Ban B. Johnson, president of the American League, and members of the National Baseball Commission who returned from New York are not pleased over the manner in which the tickets to the world's series were handled in New York. "It has been an unfortunate series, for besides the nasty weather there's been a lot of scandal connected with the games," said Johnson.

"There's no chance, though, for such a thing to put an end to the world's series, for there's too much interest in it and the players are getting so much money.

"However, the way the scalpers got control of the tickets in New York was scandalous. It was even worse than it was here in 1908.

"Had we gone through with our investigation at that time and put one or two men out of baseball the present ticket scandal would never have taken place.

"The scalpers in New York had all the tickets they wanted. You could buy any number of seats in one bunch. How they got them I cannot explain. There may be something important develop from the present scandal, but we have no time to take that up now."

Johnson will return to New York.

GRIFFITH OR MURRAY TO MANAGE SENATORS

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24.—It has been authoritatively stated here that the Washington club had as yet done nothing toward the selection of a manager for 1912 to succeed James B. McAleer, who has gone to the Boston Red Sox. The names of a dozen different men have been mentioned in connection with the position, but it can be definitely stated that either Billy Murray, formerly manager of the Philadelphia Nationals, or Clark Griffith, who has held a similar position in Cincinnati, will be the eventual choice. Hughey Jennings of Detroit could have the place, but the present owners are unwilling to give Jennings the block of stock he demands in order to sever his present relations at Detroit.

SOMERVILLE NOT TO PLAY GAME OVER

The idea of playing over the Waltham-Somerville game has been practically abandoned by all except the Waltham adherents. It is felt that the question of whether Manager Blodgett's watch got out of order allowing a longer time to play, should not effect the result of the game. Somerville's contention, is that, since the game was allowed to be concluded after the trouble was discovered, the result should stand, and they are laughing now because the watch that caused the whole trouble was furnished by Waltham High.

SLOSSON DEFEATS WORLD'S CHAMPION

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Willie Hoppe, world's champion billiardist, figured in a practice match of 500 points with George F. Slosson at the latter's billiard academy last night to prepare him for the coming match with Sutton, and the champion was defeated. The score was 500 to 264. The style of play was 18.2 and the game went to the twelfth inning for settlement. Slosson's average was 41 8-12 and his high runs were 173 and 1... Hoppe's average was 24 and his high runs were 101 and 89.

WELLS KNOCKED OUT BY SAILOR BURKE

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—After a lot of unnecessary wrangling about a suitable referee, it required less than two rounds for Sailor Burke of Brooklyn to dispose of Jumbo Wells of Australia at the Brooklyn Beach Club last night. The latter's seconds threw up the sponge in the second session, after their charge had been floored four times in less than two minutes.

JOHNNY GALLANT TO BOX AT WESTFIELD

WESTFIELD, Oct. 24.—Johnny Gallant has been matched with Chick West of Holyoke for the semi-final bout in the next show of the Whip City Athletic Club of Westfield to be held in that city next week. In the main bout Young McDonough of Manchester, N. H., will exchange wallops with Jack O'Neil of Philadelphia.

WINCHESTER HIGH WINS.

Winchester High won from Dedham High, 38 to 0, on a slippery field yesterday. Winchester used many substitutes, but outplayed its opponents in every department. The most remarkable work was the forward passing by Winchester. A run of fifty yards through centre by Quarterback Flinn of Winchester was a feature of the game.

HARD GAMES ON FOR SCHOOLBOYS

SCHOOL FOOTBALL GAMES FOR TO-DAY

Somerville vs. Newton at Newtonville.
Boston College High vs. Quincy at Quincy.
Milton vs. Volkmann at Allston.
Hyde Park vs. Marlboro at Hyde Park.

Four good schoolboy football games will be played this afternoon. The Somerville-Newton at Newtonville is the big attraction and a good crowd should be on hand when the whistle blows.

The Red and Blue team is the big favorite over the Orange and Black eleven. Somerville had a hard game on Saturday against Waltham, and one or two of the first string men will likely be kept out. Garland will not be able to get in the game, and this will weaken the Somerville backfield considerably, but Ellis, if he is substituted, will be able to put up a great game.

The game will show what the Newton team really is. This is the first real test for the Orange and Black boys and they will fight their hardest to win. Coach Dickinson has his boys well advanced in the game and is confident that they will make a good showing.

The Boston College High eleven battles with Quincy on the gridiron at the Granite City. The Boston boys are favorites. The team has displayed some good football this season and although it has been defeated it has always played a strong game.

The Quincy eleven has also been putting up a strong game and has defeated such teams as Brighton, South Boston and Boston High School of Commerce, but the Boston College High team is considered much stronger than either of these teams.

Milton High is picked to win over Volkmann this afternoon at Allston. Several of the players of the Milton team were injured in the game with Hingham and several changes will be made in the lineup this afternoon by Coach Hazelton.

Hyde Park has Marlboro High as its opponents on its home gridiron and a hard game is anticipated.

CONNECTICUT LEAGUE ELECTION POSTPONED

BRIDGEPORT, Oct. 24.—Secretary James H. O'Rourke of the Connecticut League has sent out announcements of another postponement of the annual meeting to-day to October 31 at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon in Springfield.

Whether the league will elect a president to succeed William J. Tracy at this meeting is not certain.

In all his edicts thus far Mr. Tracy says he is not going to be a candidate again, but as he said the same thing last year it wouldn't be surprising if an attempt would be made to re-elect him. It is probable, however, that the directors wouldn't stand for Mr. Tracy again.

ANDOVER TO HOLD CROSS-COUNTRY RUN

ANDOVER, Oct. 24.—Phillips Academy is to hold an invitation cross-country run over the Andover course this afternoon. Harvard, Yale, Cornell, Dartmouth and M. I. T. freshmen are expected to compete. The course is about five miles in length, the runners starting from the gymnasium and circling the seminary woods to Brothers Field and so around twice more. Andover has only two of her last year's team back this year, Ladd and Platt, but there is some promising material among the new men.

PLAYER BREAKS HAND.

Ed Williams, quarterback on the Dorchester High eleven, suffered a broken hand in practice yesterday. It is not thought, however, that the injury will keep him out of the game for any length of time.

Harvard Preparing for Brown Battle Behind Closed Gates

By TED PARKE.

The first big scrimmage of the week for the Harvard teams in preparation for the battle with Brown in the Stadium Saturday, takes place behind closed doors on Soldiers Field this afternoon. There is no time to be lost to whip the raw Crimson eleven into a fighting machine capable of coping with the Brunonian elevent which put Pennsylvania to rout most ignominiously last Saturday.

Every day this week, with the exception of Friday, which is always a day of rest for the Harvard team, will mean the hardest kind of work for the Crimson players.

Various things have conspired to keep Harvard from developing thus far into the team which should be representing the Cambridge University on the gridiron at this stage of the game. Last week the elements did all they could to hold the Crimson down, and injuries also kept some of the men out of the struggle. With the exception of the two quarters, Wigglesworth and Gardner, everyone on the Harvard squad is ready and fit to go through all the hardships which this week has in store for them.

To Strengthen Defence.

The work yesterday was much harder than is usually given the men on a Monday, although no actual scrimmage took place, the work being mainly a tackleless scrimmage for three-quarters of an hour with the second team. Naturally the varsity did not attempt to score, the work on the contrary being aimed mainly to strengthen the defence of the first eleven.

This will be the aim of the coaches for the next day or so, and toward the end of the week, the offence of the team will be given the majority of the attention, and when the tired warriors are tucked into bed on Thursday night after the hardest week thus far this season, they will be crammed full of the science of the game.

The feature of the work yesterday was the changing of Huntington from his former position of centre to that of fullback, thus displacnig Blackall, who has been holding down this job for the past ouople of games. Whether Huntington will remain a fixture as a back is still a matter of guesswork. A couple of scrimmages will determine whether he is the right sort of man for a fullback.

Huntington Strong Player.

To judge from the general analysis of the man as a football player, he should fit into this position finely. As a centre he has had a good deal of experience in the work of the player on the secondary defence, for the centre under the new rules plays back of the line the same as does the halfback.

In the defence Huntington is, therefore, qualified because of his having been a centre. In addition to this however, he is a human bullet in tackling and breaking up plays, so that to put him in as a back would mean that in addition to there being the usual centre helping to smash plays, the secondary defence would be greatly strengthened.

Huntington has a natural football sense which makes it possible for him to diagnose a play quickly and thus stop it before it has gained too much momentum. Built stockily and close to the ground, and at the same time blessed with a good deal of speed in his sturdy legs, he should be an admirable man for short line plunges and also for runs where speed is required.

In addition, his experience on the hockey team should come in very handily to aid him in dodging. In all he looks like a very fine choice for the backfield, should he be kept there. He is a bit too light for the centre position, but none too light for the backfield. He should make good in his new position.

Second Team Has Ball.

During the entire scrimmage yesterday the second team had possession of the ball, and running through a number of plays used by the Brown team the second eleven gave the varsity plenty of opportunity to solve and formulate the ways to stop and smear these plays.

The lineup of the varsity was not changed from the regular order, with the exception of Huntington at fullback.

Wigglesworth was on the field on crutches, watcnnig the work. It will be his duty from now on, since be is able to get about after a fashion, to come to the field regularly and watch and assimilate the new plays, and in addition, to give valuable hints about the playing of the quarters.

Gardner, the other quarter, was on the field in togs, but further than running several laps around the field, he did nothing strenuous. He is not in condition to play yet, although he would probably be able to get into the Brown game, should necessity require it.

"Bob" Guild, substitute fullback in 1904, was on the field yesterday watching the work. He did not take part in the coaching.

Andover in Hard Practice.

ANDOVER, Oct. 24.—The practice on Brothers Field yesterday was a hard one, regardless of the fact that the team had a hard game with the Harvard Freshmen on Saturday. The team was sent through the plays at top speed and several changes were noted in the lineup. Roberts was shifted from halfback to guard and Enright sent from guard to tackle. Malcolm was again at quarter and Washburn, who played most of the game of Saturday, was on the side lines walking around on crutches. He received a badly twisted ankle in the freshmen game and it will be some time before he will be out again. Special attention was given to punting and Malcolm was given a long drill in this department. The varsity field was in no condition to be used and one of the class fields was brought into use. The first team was lined up as follows: Van Brocklin, l.e.; Roberts, l.t.; Enright, l.g.; Hay, c.; Sullivan, r.g.; Jones, r.t.; Brann, r.e.; Malcolm, q.b.; Neilson, l.h.b.; Gault, r.h.b.; Malian, f.b.

Brown In Secret Drill.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Oct. 24.—Brown yesterday began a week of secret football practice in preparation for Saturday's game with Harvard at the Stadium. Of the regular men only two men were in the drill, the coaches letting the rest have a day off to avoid the possibility of going stale before the Crimson game. Mitchell and Goldberg were the regulars who practiced, and Bean, Teaney and Crowther watched the work. The second team was drilled in good hard fashion. Brown is now in top form and the student body believes the Crimson will suffer defeat next Saturday. Brown was not forced to show her hand at the Penn game and has a bag-full of new tricks which the coaches will perfect during the week, although they were ready for use last Saturday.

Brown came through the Penn game with but one injury on the list of the regulars. Adams, the left end, has a painfully injured hand but will be all right next Saturday. The rest of the varsity men are in fine shape. With Bartlett eligible, there is not a weak spot either in the line or backfield and capable substitutes are held in reserve for practically every position.

Last night the Brown students celebrated the Penn victory with a night shirt parade through the city streets and a bonfire with speech-making on the back campus.

Indians Watch Subs.

CARLISLE, Oct. 24.—As Coach Pope Warner dominated the Carlisle Indian practice yesterday afternoon on Indian Field, it was just fooling around, although at the close of the day's work the scrubs and Coach O'Brien's eleven got into one of the fastest scrimmages of the season, which was kept going for fully three quarters of an hour. The veteran Redskins who participated in the victory over Pittsburg followed the three practice elevens around the field, and Coach Warner frequently called their attention to the creditable work of the Indian substitutes. Fundamentals were given a light running through early in the afternoon, and indiscriminate kicking occupied a good share of the time. The easy day's work was a partial reward for Saturday's victory. Bunny Larkin, the old Cornell end, will be in Carlisle this week to help the Indian ends. Larkin's value in training the linemen has been proved here many times, and Coach Warner will leave no stone unturned to bring the best out of this year's Indian team.

M'ALEER OUT AFTER STAHL

Reports from Chicago to-day to the AMERICAN state that James McAleer, the new president of the Boston American League team, would confer to-day with "Jake" Stahl, the former star first baseman, and that McAleer would urge the bank clerk to return to this city.

McAleer, with Robert McRoy, secretary of the American League, arrived in Chicago yesterday. The main object of McAleer's visit was to accompany President Comiskey of the White Sox on a Wisconsin hunting and fishing trip. The Comiskey party leaves Chicago to-night and in the meantime McAleer will confer with Garland "Jake" Stahl.

McAleer is anxious to get Jake to head the Red Sox next year, and the local banker has intimated at various times that he would consider engaging in the national pastime again if the proper inducements were held out. Stahl, it is said, may become a stockholder in the Boston Club, and become a partner with McRoy and McAleer and at the same time play first base for the Red Sox.

McAleer denied the report that he would take McBride from the Senators to play shortstop for the Red Sox.

CALLAHAN AGAIN TO MANAGE WHITE SOX

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.—Jimmy Callahan will again manage the White Sox. Chicago fans received this pretty straight to-day, although Owner Charles Comiskey has not yet made any official announcement. Hugh Duffy, who handled the Chicago champions during the past season will be given control of Comiskey's club at Des Moines in the Western League.

Duffy will be more than a manager in his powers of handling the Des Moines club.

Comiskey has wanted a manager who lives in Chicago for his White Sox for some time. With the team manager right around the "Old Roman" declares he can work all Winter on his plans for the coming season.

Callahan bossed the White Sox in 1903 and 1904. Because of his youth he was not a success.

TIGERS READY FOR HOLY CROSS

PRINCETON, Oct. 24.—Although the Princeton did not come up to the expectations of the Tiger coaches in the Navy game they have not become discouraged in the least, and have started in earnest to remedy the faults shown up in the Middy contest and make good by winning the last four games of the season aganist Holy Cross, Harvard, Dartmouth and Yale.

The Princeton team considers the game this Saturday with Holy Cross only a practice game, which will put the team in fine condition for the last three big fights of the year.

New formations and trick plays, which will be tried out in the Holy Cross game to give them a test before the big games, will be taught the men this week. In the Navy game the Princeton team team work was consistent. Their speed and aggressiveness kept the Midshipmen on the defensive most of the four periods, but the advantage which the Tigers gained over the Middies in rushing was more than offset in the exchange of punts between Captain Dalton and the Tigers' kicker, Dewitt.

The Navy game showed that the Tiger punters were not up to the usual standard of kickers at this institution. This week will find the coaches busy in trying out punters. Penfield, Dewitt, McCormick, Andrews and Lee will be tried out and the coaches will attempt to find a kicker who can hold his own with the kickers of the Dartmouth, Harvard and Yale teams.

Dewitt Is Nervous.

Dewitt often gets off punts of more than fifty yeards in length in practice, but when he gets into a game he becomes nervous and his punts do not carry anywhere near that distance. He also gets the ball off slow and this worries the players and coachers, fearing that the punt may be blocked.

Penfield and McCormick are nearly as good punters as Dewitt, but both are slow and the coachers are afraid that their kicks would be blocked by a fast charging line. Penfield, Andrews and Lee will be tried out during the next few days, and it is hoped that a good kicker will be found.

Penfield has been showing steady improvement in his kicking during the past week and may supplant Dewitt at fullback, as both players are about equal in offensive and defensive ability.

With the return of Captain Hart, the former Exeter star, to the team the coaches feel more at ease. The giant has taken his old place at left tackle and braces up that side of the line. The Tigers are strong in tackle material this year, as they have five candidates for two positions. All are first class men, and the other first string tackle to be a running mate to Hart will not be selected until just before the Dartmouth game.

Just now Phillips seems to have the call for the position, but McLean, McCormick, C. D. Baker or Normoan may oust the youngster from his position before the big games.

Bluenthal at Centre.

Bluenthal is sure of his position at centre on account of his steady passing and great defensive ability. In the Navy game every play sent at the small centre was repulsed and not a gain could be made through his position.

Wilson, last season's giant guard, is back at his old stand beside Captain Hart. Both of these giants weigh well over 200 pounds. Both are active and work together well. With these two men on the left side of the line make that side invincible. Dutch Brown is getting the call just now for the other guard, but he is not so strong there but what he can be replaced by McCormick, McLean or Winants if he takes a slump in his playing.

The ends are the only positions which are worrying the coaches. Vaughn is the only end who is really certain to hold down that position. There is a wealth of mediocre material out for the two positions, but Vaughn is the only one who stands above an ordinary end. Wight, Dunlap, White and Baker are being tried out by the coaches, and it is probable that two tandems will be sent in against Harvard and Yale.

Pendleton, the former star halfback, seems a fixture at quarterback, his brilliant open field running and star end runs making it certain that he will be the field general when the team lines up against the Crimson and the Elis.

Backs Are Fast.

Dewitt is now at fullback, but Penfield may oust him at any time, as there is not a great deal of difference in the two players' ability. Sawyer and Baker will undoubtedly be the first string backs in the big games. Both are good line plungers and both are clever defensive players. Farr will probably get a chance to substitute for one of the halfbacks during the remaining games. In the Navy game, while substituting for Pendleton at quarterback, Farr put up a good game.

Since Eddie Hart has returned to the team the coaches have become more confident of beating Harvard and Yale than they have been all season.

Leo Houck Favorite Over Dillon in Bout at Armory

By JACK CONWAY.

There will be more than a baker's dozen of [illegible] at the Armory A. A. to-night [illegible] of Lancaster, Pa., and Jack [illegible] of Indianapolis swap wallops [illegible] round mill there. Both young [illegible] have made [illegible] records since [illegible] a livelihood in the ring.

[illegible] the stuff that keeps the [illegible] Walter has the champion[illegible] at any man in the [illegible] the middle [illegible]

[illegible] Evans has [illegible] work [illegible] over the news was [illegible] wires that the [illegible] Houck [illegible] the other [illegible] slipped the [illegible]

But be it as it may we will have a [illegible] Houck is [illegible] with [illegible] Lewis. Houck put up a sensational battle against Lewis. In the first round he was knocked to the mat and practically every person in the house believed that he would be any easy K. O. victim for Lewis.

Houck Came Back Strong.

After the first round, however, Houck came back strong and out-fought and out-boxed [illegible] for the remainder of [illegible] lost to Klaus [illegible]

[illegible] will meet [illegible] Frank Man[illegible]

[illegible] a favorite by [illegible]

[illegible] for the past few months and is boomed as a comer. He has fought most of his battles around Philadelphia and has usually more than held his own.

[illegible] sparring partner to Battling Nelson [illegible] Dane [illegible] period [illegible] Boston [illegible] has gained a wealth of experience.

The first preliminary should be a red hot one with [illegible] Hard of Boston and Jack Johnson [illegible] as the principals. In the other preliminary Eddie Keefe of [illegible] Pat Rocco of Lawrence [illegible] the rail birds [illegible]

Al [illegible] has started on the war path. The dapper Italian bantamweight is anxious to get matches with the leading boys in the country who can make from 116 to 120 pounds. [illegible] is now under the management of [illegible]

If my memory serves me right, Jimmy Walsh has [illegible] training and is [illegible] to prove that he is the best bantamweight in the world. With both [illegible] looking for trouble, why would it be a good idea for the Armory officials to [illegible] this pair of local favorites?

A great battle is assured when Joe Rivers, the Mexican featherweight wonder, meets Joe Kirkwood at Vernon next Saturday. Before Rivers was whipped by Johnny Kilbane of Cleveland he was considered as a probable successor of the [illegible] Abe Attell. There is no doubting the fact that Rivers had the Forest City [illegible] the time that Johnny [illegible] across the lucky punch that turned the tide of battle in his favor. At the opening of the sixteenth round Rivers took [illegible] after [illegible] twenty seconds [illegible] the Mexican's undoing. If [illegible] Kirkwood [illegible] he will challenge Kilbane for a return match and is confident that he will reverse the tables.

Packey McFarland has been matched to meet Al Dewey at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on October 30. Dewey has made quite a reputation for himself throughout Pennsylvania and is sure to give the Windy City favorite a stiff argument.

Emil Thiry has been making drastic efforts to match Packey with Ad Wolgast, but to date his efforts have met with very little success. Tom Jones will not let the Michigan "Wildcat" go on with McFarland unless the latter agrees to make 133 pounds ringside. And from where I sit McFarland will never be able to make this weight.

[illegible] Lee [illegible] to this office today. "Rol[illegible] a certain gent [illegible] the name of Wolcott lambasted him [illegible] the Armory ring last Tuesday [illegible] Robert explained his pugilistic difficulty thus:

"I wasn't given a fair deal when I met dat man Wolcott. He fouled me repeated[illegible] the referee said nothing. My defeat at the hands of Wolcott has caused gloom and more gloom to settle over the fair city of Worcester. Everybody is sad as a [illegible] of the [illegible] at the loss [illegible] men and women, sturdy young men and fair young wames are terrible broke up over my defeat."

All of which makes me feel sad and dreary. But from where I sit those [illegible] looked awful [illegible] when Mr Robert Lee fought Mr Joseph Wolcott at the Tremont street club seven days back. Enough!

Tom Goodman of Boston and Demon Young of Newport, R. I., should put up a great battle when they clash at the Perry A. C. of Newport, Wednesday night. This pair of star "bill" artists met on Labor Day and put up one of the best [illegible] ever pulled off at Newport. This match is sure to bring out a packed house. In addition to the main bout the club will put on five good preliminaries.

[illegible] Monter of Charlestown is very anxious to meet Tommy Flannagan of Cambridge. The "Charlestown" [illegible] issued a challenge to all bantam weights in captivity and the Bunker Hill mixer has a hunch that he is the man to give Tommy a trimming. Munice is a good boy, but from where I sit Flannagan looks awfully good.

BOUTS TO-NIGHT

Jack Dillon vs. Leo Houck, Mark Conley vs. Freddie Kelley, Ed Kenny vs. Pat Rocco and Dick Pollard vs. J. Johnson, Armory A. A.

Young Dyson vs. Willie Jones, New York.

Ted Nelson vs. Jeff Smith, Albany.

Howard Morrow vs. J. Novak, Benton Harbor.

HOLY CROSS HAS MANY CRIPPLES

WORCESTER, Oct. 24.—Coach "Tom" Larkin is [illegible] the Holy Cross squad to the limit this week in preparation for the game with Princeton next Saturday. The team will use wide open play against the Tigers and [illegible] crippled, hopes to score on the fast [illegible]

The team's work against [illegible] Massachusetts Aggies was very [illegible] to Coach Larkin [illegible] the team a good shaking up. [illegible] the 200-pound guard, has been shifted over to centre in place of Monahan who received a fractured wrist in the game Saturday. The injury will probably keep him out of the game for the rest of the season.

Davitt, the leg guard, is also out of the game for a few days because of a slight injury but he will probably be back in the lineup when the team tackles Princeton.

[illegible] sprained ankle will be kept on the sidelines for several days but will probably start the Princeton game. Jimmy O'Brien has joined the team after being out of the game with an injury received in the Harvard game and will start the game this week. Fullback Gibson has been shifted from his position at guard to take Davitt's place and [illegible] of the second team has been placed at fullback.

Tries New Plays.

The new shakeup caused by so many crippled players being out of the game has benefited the team greatly and Coach Larkin feels confident that [illegible] score on the Tigers. New formation plays which are to be tried out against Princeton are being taught to the men and they work the forward pass with great skill.

[illegible] the star quarterback [illegible] port with the squad this afternoon, and will take an important part in the new shifts to be tried out.

The Holy Cross uses the Minnesota shift a great part of the game [illegible] its forward passes, onside kicks and line plunges all from the same formation. In this way the opponents are baffled in guessing where the play is going to be sent.

The line is one of the best ever turned out at the institution and all the men are fighters and charge low when on the offensive. The line almost lies down when [illegible] the defensive, making the opposing backs fall over them into the arms of the secondary defence. The team is one of the fastest among the minor college elevens this year. The interference for the back field men is superb.

With the big shakeup it looks as if Quinn will be kept at centre and Collins and Gibson will be the guards against Princeton.

Pickett at Guard.

Pickett will also get a chance in the game as he took Davitt's place in the Argles game and made good, playing a very strong game. Ostergren [illegible] will be [illegible] the first string [illegible]

[illegible] school end, and [illegible] are sure of [illegible] are well able [illegible] McCabe is one of the best defensive ends of [illegible] year [illegible] made around [illegible] offensive players, forming good interference for [illegible]

SPORT NEWS AND GOSSIP.

By FRANK DALLAM.

Having just been hurled into the sporting department, and somewhat rusty on the doings, we read with much interest the head line in a daily paper: "Dr. Roller Matched Up." Um! Don't know the old Doc, but from the name we'll bet he's a wrestler.

All managers expecting to win the pennants in the two leagues next year are tipped off to sign, among the new crop of right-handers and port flingers, and other things a winning team is supposed to have, a few web-footers. Pete McNally, Annette Kellerman, Rose Pitonof, Uncle Ernest Jackson's school of diving belles, and Speedy would have fitted in very nicely for either manager over in Philadelphia the last few days.

Somebody has pinched [illegible] horse. Famous pacing gelding B[illegible] Dillon, was stolen after a [illegible] the stable of the Winslow Contracting Company. Up, you Vigilantes! A careful search of the three-ball shops have failed to reveal any trace of the animal. Said Dillon was a [illegible] descendant of Sydney Dillon [illegible] sire of Lou Dillon, and bears a strong family resemblance. No relation, however, to John Dillon out in Los Angeles.

Pauline Wayne, having starred on the magazine pages, in the society column and in an account of a cabinet meeting, we will now take her over on the sport page. The President's private cow has just returned from her tour to Milwaukee. While there she was put up at the most exclusive clubs and met some of the best citizens, including Sol Lit, Jimmie Wa[illegible], and Sherby Becker.

According to Charley Dryden out in Chicago, Charles W. Murphy has officially admitted defeat in the series between the Cubs and White Sox. When asked for more public utterances Mr Murphy said he would issue a signed statement every five minutes after he could get settled, but says Dryden that [illegible] was spoken in a fictitious tone and may not be r[illegible]

What do you know about that rumor that Wagner is to manage Cincinnati Reds next season? Though the papers said it was our own Charley of the Boston Red Sox who was slated to pull off the job, we have a hunch that the wires got crossed and that it is Honus who was meant.

In all the gloom sent out from Philadelphia not a correspondent has had a word to say about Horace Fogel, president of the Phillies. Something strange here. Perhaps nobody has seen Horace during the series. If Horace sees 'em first they'll have to write something about him. As a talker, Mr. Fogel bats 1.000.

We observe that the Red Sox quartette is billed to wheeze a few bars down at Brockton. The warbling four is composed of Larry Gardner, Hugh Bradley, Martin McHale and Buck O'Brien. Don't know who is playing first bass or who is singing second bass, but at that we'd take a chance on our ear drums and listen to 'em if they would drop around our way.

Why not arrange a World Seriesof concerts between the Red Sox quartette and the celebrated Cubs quartette. There certainly are four swell yappers—Mr Frank Schulte, the eminent caterer, Mr Artie Hofman, the ex-St. Louis banker, Mr. Lew Richie, who has been known to warm up by rolling the ball in the palm of his hand, and Colonel Billy Tinker's little son Joe from Kansas City.

Our own Mr Lardner was a utility basso on the quartette until he reformed and left Chicago. On their last trip to Boston we had the great pleasure of hearing the Cubs' Comedy Four tear off a line or two of the [illegible] ody down in the Lenox basement—over in the northwest corner where the leather seats are nice and soft. Some harmony, believe us. All sang with the soft pedal on. Afraid they might wake Cap Chance, who was asleep over in the Copley Square.

It is costing something for the Boston fans to see the world's series outside of the elected ten that the AMERICAN is paying expenses for, as [illegible] proved by Frank Hyde of the Boylston alleys receiving a rush order from his partner, Jack Sheafe, to get a certified check over to him in quick time. The amount! It's a secret, but a guess of $250 comes pretty close to hitting the mark. By the way, Sheafe writes he is going to remain on the firing line if the final game is decided anytime before Christmas.

Terry Griffin is around now wanting the Boston City League to shift its play from Wednesday each week to any other night. Terry is Bill Beatty's star bowler on the Chauncy team and it so happens that Wednesday [illegible] day off from work. There has been wonderment in his scores being [illegible] in the last couple of matches, but Terry says he would like to have [illegible] the other leading pin smashers follow him around town all day in [illegible] friends and see how much nearer they could come to locating the [illegible] night. A suggestion to Beatty is to lock Terry up during th[illegible] [illegible] Rays[illegible]

ATHLETIC BOOM AT MILTON HIGH

Athletics at Milton High School are booming. More spirit is being shown this season [illegible] at that school than ever before. At the beginning of the year the football team was shy many necessary equipments, but last week an interested party came forward to Coach Hazelton and gave an amount of money that will greatly aid the team.

In the past athletics at the school have been greatly handicapped by the lack of money, but by the great showing of the [illegible] this season [illegible] terest and at the next town meeting many of the [illegible] citizens will put up a fight to appropriate money for school day athletics.

The success of the Milton eleven this season is undoubtedly due to the fine coaching of "Syd" Hazelton, the old Dartmouth star.

KENNEY WINS FIGHT FROM YOUNG CURRY

FARMINGTON, N. H., Oct. 24.—The American Boxing Association had its first meeting here last night. The first bout was between Young Elwell of Farmington and Young Malloy of Biddeford, Me., and after three minutes of hard struggling Elwell knocked Malloy out with a right-hand swing to the jaw. The second bout was between Young Kenney of Lawrence, Mass., and Young Curry of Dover. Referee Sheehan gave a decision to Kenney, but the majority of those present said that it should have at least been a draw for Curry, who gave a clever exhibition.

FRAMINGHAM HIGH WINS.

HUDSON, Oct. 24.—Framingham High defeated Hudson High, 13 to 0, on Central street field yesterday. Framingham used the forward pass for long gains, with Gallagher carrying the ball. Hudson lost the ball on Framingham's four-yard line in the first period.

For nearly a year I've been administering "606" for acute and chronic blood poisoning with most gratifying results. The marvelous effects of the drug in restoring health and strength in cases of certain forms of Paralysis, Locomotor Ataxia, Anaemia and Debility places "606" in as high a position in the Medical World as Antitoxin and the X-Ray. Notwithstanding the conservatism of many medical men, as well as those lacking practical experience in the scientific administration of "606" and the majority of medical men who frown upon the remedy and regret its discovery, the medical journals of the world teem with reports of cases that failed to respond to Mercury, Potash and Electrotherapeutics. My own experience with hundreds of cases justifies me in taking the stand that Prof Paul Ehrlich has not exaggerated the properties and virtues of his discovery, which is now in use in all larger hospitals and army and navy departments of the civilized world.
There are no dangerous results following the administration of "606." It kills the spirokaeta, pronounced spi-ro-kee-ter (the germ of the disease) when given by competent physicians. IT DOES NOT INJURE THE SIGHT, but improves failing vision. The manufacturers of Mercury and Potash would have you believe that it injuries the eyes. I have improved and in some cases restored sight to many who were becoming blind. THE PREVENTION OF LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA AND CHECKING ITS ADVANCEMENT IS BEYOND DISPUTE. First consultation free.

"MOISETTE!" he repeated. "Ah, if [illegible] know how madly I love [illegible]

"[illegible] I will kick the props [illegible] under the [illegible] crazy priest [illegible] first [illegible] out [illegible]

"If she wishes [illegible] and Oxus's [illegible] it just to see her smile [illegible]

"But no! [illegible] Moisette [illegible] of Oxus and Fulbert [illegible] does not know—though later she must be made to see.

"The bloody plans over which her father and Oxus are toiling in order to establish their chimerical power cannot always be veiled by studies in oceanography. [illegible] corpses [illegible] from the murderers.

"Then it is that I must really sacrifice my ideas, put myself into a state of submission and gentleness like other men.

"Null Rottman, nihilist; Severac, the anarchist, will then be the most obedient, the most inoffensive of a king's subjects or of the citizens of a republic."

But here a brutal thought crossed Severac's mind, for the man, carried away by his exaltation, stopped suddenly, was silent, crossed his arms, lowered his head and murmured half aloud:

"I am insane. [illegible] Moisette loved me [illegible] is proud [illegible] will [illegible] love [illegible] hate [illegible] her. It will be impossible for her to remain indifferent. If she despises me, then what?"

He hesitated, then went on in a still lower voice [illegible]

"But why should [illegible] I am the only man besides [illegible] and Oxus whom she sees. The other inhabitants of the Lost Isle are either monks or slaves.

"I am forty years old, but I hardly look thirty-five. Thank fortune I am one of that [illegible] race who live and die without [illegible] Why should she [illegible] love me?"

And so [illegible] this genius, an inventor whose [illegible] had led him to persevere, who [illegible] started from [illegible] voluntary [illegible] when one once more [illegible] back [illegible], asked himself what his conduct would be in the great combat between two men and the entire world, if a young girl whom he had seen four times [illegible] determined not to love him!

Now that he had come to that time in his life when his spirit was ruled by his affections, Charles Severac found two ways open before him: the way of love with its [illegible] ennobling emotions and the way of hate with all the crimes which it engendered.

Severac's Joy.

The ring of a bell brought Severac rudely from his passionate dream.

He arose, reached out his hand and pressed one of the ivory buttons at the head of his bed.

It was his response and it meant that he could be seen.

Steps were heard in the smoking room, the door opened and Scipio appeared, saying:

"My master requests that M. Severac will come to the dining room, where he will be expected hereafter for all meals."

"Very well."

The negro bowed and went out.

"At last," exclaimed the engineer, "I will see her at least twice a day now—at noon and at eight o'clock. To be sure Oxus and Fulbert will be there. But I can make my eyes say much. I can read Moisette's response in her own."

He took off the white blouse which enveloped him and replaced it with a more ceremonious garment.

"Besides," he continued, "I must talk to her this very day. I will watch my chance and will not let it escape. My love, which is my torture and my hope, must be confessed to Moisette.

"I must find out her sentiments.

"If she repulses me—but no—she will pretend surprise, or emotion, perhaps. Then she will ask for time to reflect.

"To-day is March 13. I will give her two weeks.

"I must have her answer on March 28. That is three days before the World Congress at Marseilles is to answer Fulbert's ultimatum.

"If I am repulsed, woe be to the priest, woe be to Oxus, woe be to the man-fish and to all the other dwellers in the Lost Isle!

"I shall have Moisette, if I have to overturn the whole universe!"

During his soliloquy, Severac's face had passed through the most diverse expressions of passion: doubt, pride, tenderness, hatred, violent affection and indomitable resoluteness. With the closing words, he raised his hand as if to make a pledge to himself which nothing could break.

Then with a swiftness which demonstrated how completely this man was able to control his physical appearance, Severac took on that cold, calm, even humble mien which was familiar to Oxus and Fulbert.

The dining room was on the upper floor, opening from that hall which separated the private apartments of Oxus and Fulbert. When Severac entered the priest, savant and Moisette were seated around the table.

"Severac," said Oxus, and it was the first time the master had addressed his colleague without the prefix Monsieur, "Severac, this will be your place after this."

The engineer bowed, saluted Moisette and excused himself for being late. Then they sat down.

The table was square, each person occupying a side of it. Oxus faced Fulbert and Moisette faced Severac.

There was little conversation during the meal, Oxus and Fulbert being preoccupied with their dreams of worlds conquered, and Moisette being under the tyrannical spell cast by the mysterious young man seen that morning.

As for Severac, he forced himself to hide under an apparent impassivity the tumultuous sentiments which the young girl was inspiring within him.

A little pale and languid, Moisette was even more beautiful than ever.

When she raised her eyes, her gaze met that of Severac, and little by little a vague uneasiness came over her at finding those eyes almost constantly fixed upon her.

Scipio served the meal quickly and silently, removing the plates and passing the food which came up from the kitchen by a little electric dumbwaiter.

A Silent Meal.

Usually Oxus and Fulbert enjoyed talking with Moisette as a most grateful diversion in the midst of their work. But to-day the almost mournful air at this luncheon for four would have seemed menacing to any one who might have been free to observe it.

As each was too much occupied with his own passion to talk, none found the general silence strange.

When dessert had been removed, Fulbert was the first to rise from the table. Turning to the engineer he said:

"Severac, after our siesta we will expect you in the laboratory."

The engineer responded with a bow. But this time Moisette noticed the familiarity with which the priest addressed his colleague. It surprised her, and she asked herself the reason.

As soon as Fulbert and Oxus had left the dining room, she found herself alone with Severac. She noticed then an odd expression in his eyes, an expression she had never before seen. It was a mute avowal of admiration, desire, beseeching.

To be continued to-morrow.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

BE CAUTIOUS.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have known a young man for about a year and love him dearly. He met me the other night and took me home and told me how much he really cared for me, but said that he would not keep company because he doesn't make enough to support a wife. He said I would be the one if he did settle down, but he has so [illegible] girl friends I can scarcely [illegible] What would you advise me [illegible] I have an engagement with him for next week, but the more I see [illegible] love him and he says it is the same with him. I am willing to have him, but he said he won't [illegible] me [illegible] misery. Don't you think $18 a week would support a man and wife?

ANXIOUS.

HE is quite right in refusing to see you too often if his intentions are not serious. There are two courses to pursue and you must take the one which will cause you the less unhappiness. Either give him up or see him rarely. In the latter case you take the risk of falling in love with him unless you are strong enough to remember that only friendship exists between you, and in strength [illegible] you raise the respect and admiration [illegible] best possible foundation for true love. On the other hand, in avoiding him you [illegible] forget him and escape the [illegible] doubts which now assail you.

Eighteen dollars a week is scarcely enough to support two, although with great economy and a little help on your part it could be done. Be cautious, do not let yourself become unhappy over a man who may not be worthy of you.

CUT HIM OFF YOUR LIST

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty-six and have been going with a young man seven years my senior for three years. I am dearly in love with him. At first he would tell me how [illegible] and what we would do when we were married, although he never asked me to marry him. Of late he has treated me very strangely, sometimes [illegible] hearing from him or even seeing him for two or three weeks, and when we meet he would be very [illegible]

Now he has gone out West for the past three [illegible] I have received [illegible] My folks [illegible] They are always [illegible] getting [illegible] for me. Do you think [illegible] waiting [illegible] I have tried to make him jealous by going out with a lawyer friend of mine, but he doesn't seem to care.

E. M. C.

TELL your parents you are not engaged and do not expect to marry until you fall in love.

Home Laundry Helps

THE housekeeper who is always asked to provide [illegible] for her laundress will welcome a new arrangement by which the cover is easily put on.

Sets of hooks are sold that can be pinned into the under edges of the cover and the muslin laced into place in a few minutes. Not only is this method quick, but the cover can be pulled smooth, and there is no excuse for not putting frequent fresh ones.

Another [illegible] iron holder. Why not do with it [illegible] entirely. This is managed [illegible] asbestos-lined hoods with [illegible] When clapped on the iron the heat is kept in it and away from the hand, and you can iron longer with a single heating, while your fingers are not blistered.

An acceptable gift for a kitchen shower or an engagement present would be sets of such asbestos-lined irons. They come in various sizes [illegible] for laundry and hot cloth purposes [illegible] smaller ones for tourists' use.

One of these light tourist irons [illegible] with an alcohol heater is useful to the girl who boards and must do small laundry bits. There are also small irons that are self-heating, sometimes with alcohol, again with charcoal or electricity. The alcohol ones are most practical.

Every household needs a [illegible] iron. These have an extended point that runs into tucks, plaits and flounces and prevents the folds being creased or flattened.

Do not fail to have a covered hamper for soiled clothes. It is more sightly and more sanitary than the open basket.

It will save [illegible] the wash if [illegible] of the family has a separate laundry bag [illegible] ing that comes over [illegible] On this should be pinned a correct list of the clothes.

Much sorting and mating of stockings will be saved if small buttons are put at the top of each pair and the two stockings held together with a [illegible] the process of washing and [illegible] This is a simpler [illegible] putting [illegible] on every pair of stockings [illegible]

[illegible] if [illegible] instead of being hung separately [illegible] with pins, are spread smoothly on a big towel with small pins, which is fastened to the line. Much room is saved in this way [illegible]

[illegible] without [illegible] pains, is avoided.

Do not have [illegible] that they are [illegible] is fairly safe, but expensive, and [illegible] Never hang [illegible] has been carefully [illegible] Many [illegible]

Married Life the Second Year

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Packing Away the Summer and Getting Out the Winter Clothes

THERE is something subtly depressing in putting away the clothes of one season and taking out those of the next.

There are always memories and associations that cling about them. If the season has been a happy one, it is with regret that we realize it is past. If it was an unhappy or even an indifferent one, we are filled with vague sadness that another half year of our life has gone and brought us so little.

And there is always, too, a feeling that we have failed to make the most of the time. There are suggestions of lost opportunities, possibilities of happiness or achievement in the season now ended, that we have missed.

And now as Helen folded away her Summer dresses, something of all this was in her mind. She wondered, too, what the next Summer would be like—what changes might come before she would again unpack these things. Would Warren and she be closer or farther away? What gradual shifting of conditions might not another six months bring?

There is, too, a reminiscent sadness about the things from the year before. And as she shook the camphor balls from her furs and laid them in the window to sun she could hardly have analyzed her feelings of depression.

Helen's Sad Thoughts

She thought of the day Warren had bought them for her. She remembered how he had said, as he rubbed his hand over the soft fur: "Looks just like you, Kitten." How rarely he called her "Kitten" now. How rarely he used any pet name or any endearing terms.

As she shook the creases from Warren's heavy overcoat something fluttered from one of the pockets. They were the stubs of theatre tickets—"Orchestra, M, Dec. 5."

She remembered the night, a bitter cold night with a deep snow from the day before, and Warren had scolded because she had forgot her rubbers. She had wanted to go to a new problem play, but he had insisted on vaudeville. And it had been a very poor bill, except for a one-act play. She smiled as she thought of their heated argument on the way home, over the ethics involved in the sketch—a girl forced to choose between stealing and going on the street.

Helen put the bits of pasteboard back into the coat pocket with a foolish little sentiment, that since they had been there so long she would not throw them away. Then, instinctively, she went through the other pockets—some matches, a cigarette, a collar button (the cheap, black kind the laundries use), a pencil and a subway ticket. Evidently she had packed the coat away in a hurry and had forgotten to go through it.

There flashed through her mind a story she had read not long before of a wife emptying the pockets before sending one of her husband's suits to the tailor—and finding a note which proved his unfaithfulness.

Helen stooped over and rubbed her cheek against the coat with a sudden rush of tenderness. At least she need never fear that. She could go through the pockets of all his suits—and find nothing like that. She hugged that thought to her now as she had many times before.

"Do you want tomatoes with the salad to-night—or just the plain lobster?" asked Delia, coming to the door.

"Why, tomatoes, if you have any nice ones—and a little green pepper. While you're here, Delia, help me lift out this tray. No, I want that chair—we'd better put it here on the floor. And Delia," as she started out, "heat an iron for me—I want to press out some things."

The dining room clock struck four, and Helen realized that she must hurry if she wanted to get these trunks and boxes cleared away before Warren came.

Packing the Clothes

Quickly she took out the rest of the Winter clothes and packed in their place the Summer things, making a list of the content of each box and trunk. This she always did, so if any one article was needed before the others, it could easily be found.

She never packed Warren's things separately. There was always a feeling that she wanted them with hers—it gave a certain sense of intimacy seeing his clothes laid away with her own.

"The iron's hot, ma'am," called Delia.

"All right, but come help me here a moment first. Here," handing her a pencil and pad, "make a list of these things as I put them in."

Delia was not an expert penman, but she managed to write legibly the articles which Helen called out as she folded and packed them away.

"Pongee suit.
"Blue mull dress.
"White parasol.
"Warren's linen coat.
"   "   gray flannel suit.
"   "   blue serge suit
White duck skirt."

There was a quick step in the hall—and Warren opened the door.

"Hello! What's going on here?" gazing around at the littered room. Helen was on the floor folding up the white skirt.

"Oh, I didn't expect you so soon! I'm just getting out the Winter things."

"What on earth's that?" as something crunched under his heel.

"Oh, dear, you've stepped on a moth ball. Wait, I'll get the dust pan and brush it up."

"Well, it smells like fury! Can't you get something else for the moths besides this stuff?"

"Yes, but nothing so good. It's the odor that keeps them away."

"I should say it was strong enough to keep anything away. That my heavy overcoat over there?" crossing the room and picking up his coat. He took it over to the window and examined it critically.

"Not a bad looking coat. Have it pressed up and it'll do the first of the Winter anyway. Where's the brown suit?"

Depressed All Day

"Right over there, dear, on that chair. No, not there—the other one—there under my dress."

"Needs a good sponging and pressing. What's this on the lapel? Some of your powder—that's what it is. You've got most of my coats ruined with that infernal face powder of yours. What's in it anyway. It sticks like grease. By George, nothing will take it off!"

"Why, Warren, you know I never use anything but rice powder—and surely I don't use enough to"——

"Enough? ENOUGH? You just plaster it on—that's all. But I'll take mighty good care you don't smear up my coats this Winter."

"Don't dear—don't say things to me now. I've been depressed all day—working over these things."

"Depressed? What's there about this to depress you? The only thing I notice is this," kicking a moth ball out of his way.

Helen was rolling up some gauze underwear and filling in the corners of the trunk.

"It IS depressing, dear, packing away all these Summer things and wondering what will happen—what changes may come about before they are taken out next year."

Warren threw down the sweater he had picked up, with a gesture of disgust.

"Gad! You're even worse than I thought! If there's anything you CAN'T moon over I'd like to know what it is. Here!" as he stepped on another moth ball. "What are you trying to do: scatter these blooming things all over the place?"

Beauty Is Positively More Than Skin Deep

PROOF FOR DOUBTERS

The old saying, "Beauty is only skin deep," is good as a pacifier, but not a reality. The skin is so constructed that almost any one may have a beautiful complexion, if care and common sense are used.

The skin is composed of two layers, through which thousands of little tubes or canals run. These are called pores, and convey to the surface oil, perspiration and other waste matter, which, mixed with dust dirt, soon close them. One layer upon another soon enlarges them so as to become noticeable.

Look in your mirror, notice the little black dots soap and water has not reached. Examine the skin covered by clothing and you will be unable to find dot or pore.

Closed pores means the waste matter must find a new channel, hence pimples, blotches, red spots and numerous other blemishes.

Every woman's toilet table should contain at least two articles, one to keep the pores clean and one to protect them when out of doors. In your selection, great care should be exercised.

We manufacture two harmless useful creams, especially prepared for this purpose—Plexo Cleansing Cream—Plexo Greaseless Cream.

We have invested close to a quarter of a million dollars in the trade-mark name of Plexo, and have produced the finest quality money and brains can produce.

Plexo Creams not only cleanse and protect the pores, but clear the complexion and remove blemishes in nature's way.

Send us your address and we will gladly mail, absolutely free, generous tubes of these wonderful creams. You have nothing to lose, and everything to gain.

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

THE tears started smartingly into her eyes. In three weeks the pendulum of her life seemed to have swung back. . . . It was nerves, pure and simple, she told herself that vehemently, yet it seemed to her as though gradually the spirit of the dead man was coming back into the house, that slowly but surely the spirit of dead John Saxe was driving out the spirit of Martindale from the man who had taken his place in the world—his name, his wealth—his wife . . .

Not once, but a dozen times a day, it seemed to her that John Martindale spoke to her with the voice of John Saxe . . . that was little enough: nerves were an excellent explanation for such an obsession. The voice and the look were little enough. What mattered was that the man she loved—Jack, the boy-love of Wyndflete days—the clear-eyed, frank, lovable companion of the voyage out—spoke with the mind of the dead man: was beginning to see things as John Saxe had seen them through ugly smoked glasses.

"Oh, it is terrible," Kitty whispered to herself. "Too terrible. Don't punish me with madness, oh, dear God, not with madness." . . .

Martindale came into her room when she was dressing. She was fresh from her bath, and her hair hung in its wealth of rebellious tangle over the shoulders of her thin muslin wrap.

Looked at Her Hair

Martindale looked at her hair as John Saxe would have looked, hungeringly. He did not touch it and tell her he loved it, as the man of three weeks ago would have done.

"I want a word with you, Kitty," he said. "I am sorry to be an untoward visitor—but it's not easy to find you alone in these days." . . .

"Isn't it—you dear humbug—since when have I ceased to be at your every beck and call?" Her voice was lightly mocking, but she stretched out her hand toward him with an appealing gesture. He did not look at her. He had gone over to the window and was peering through the woven grass blind.

"Since this confounded Englishman has come out here," he said. "Kitty, I may as well tell you frankly, I am about sick of this. When is this fellow going?"

"My dear Jack, how on earth can I tell?"

Kitty turned and faced him; the muslin sleeves fell back from the white arms that were raised to her head, where her hands were busy twisting and coiling the red-brown hair. The attitude was full of grace, revealing every slender curve of the slim body.

"You've got to tell him to go." There was sudden passion in Martindale's voice; his hands, clasped behind his back, were locking and unlocking. "I can't stand this life any longer. Do you think I'm blind—or a fool—not to see how things are? Do you think I imagine that it's for the joy of my company that this young fool hangs on here in the face of every conceivable insult I can offer him?"

"No, I don't think that," she said quietly.

"It Was for Your Sake"

He made a sort of incoherent noise that choked in his throat, and came toward her quickly. The sound and the movement were so reminiscent of other scenes with the dead John Saxe that she felt for a moment stunned and sick.

"Ah, you don't even trouble to deny it," he said, chokingly. "To me, whom you have brought to this pass! You don't even trouble to deny that here, before my eyes, after so short a time, you've taken up this man—preferred him before me. Flirted—no, by heaven, there's a stronger name for"——

"Jack!" The white passion in her voice and eyes gave pause even to his half mad fury of jealousy. "How dare you insult me? How dare you throw up against me what I have done for your sake?"

"For my sake? Is it for my sake you have played fast and loose with this boy"——

"Yes!" She cut short his words with an angry gesture. "For your sake—to save you! But I despise myself for it now. This man came here as a spy from England. Let him go back with his story now—I don't care. You've killed my power to care."

It was true. The words had boiled up at white heat out of the crucible of her wounded heart. Yet the moment they were uttered she regretted them—the look that had swept across John Martindale's face had snuffed the flame of her anger like a wind. It was the look of a savage hunter who had suddenly sighted his quarry; a look she had seen in the face of some beasts and one man.

"A spy," he repeated. "What do you mean?" His voice that had vibrated a moment since with passion had steadied curiously.

Tells John the Truth

She told him briefly, going on with her toilet all the while quietly, yet never relaxing for a moment her veiled scrutiny of his face. But a mask seemed to have fallen over it after that one illuminating look; it told her nothing. Martindale had a wonderful command of his face, he could control his voice—his ecclesiastical training stood him there in good stead, but he could not control his hands; their stealthy twisting movement showed her the agitated working of his mind.

"And you think he suspects something." His voice was still pitched in that monotonous, level tone.

She made an impatient little movement with her hands.

"Naturally. He probably knows—not the truth—he could not know that—but that you are not the man he came to Africa to find. And—that knowledge of his must go no further. I think I can promise it will go no further. I ask you to trust me—that is all."

She spoke lifelessly. There was no fire in her appeal. She felt as though it was not she who was speaking, but that she stood apart, a spectator watching this man and another woman playing out some mechanical part.

"I do trust you, Kitty. I place myself in your hands—utterly." The man spoke eagerly, with a certain affection of humility in his voice that was singularly unconvincing. "I'll do exactly what you wish. Only—it hurts that you don't trust me, Kitty. I hate to think you've had this to bear all these days alone."

The Look That Betrays

He looked at her searchingly it seemed to her. There was insincerity in voice and face. That other look that had flashed out in a moment when fear and surprise had beaten down his guard seemed bitten into her mind. She would have given much for the power to recall the admission she had made in the heat of her anger.

"I don't want you to do anything," she said. "Promise me that—just be your natural self and rely on me."

"Of course. You don't suppose I shall show any difference. I'll be as civil as I can be and keep off the Carr business. Only——"

He turned away quickly, but not so quickly but that she saw the sudden twitching of his face, the fierce glint that had crept into his blue eyes.

"Only—one won't go down without putting up a fight for it first," he said "I've gone through too much for you to let you go"——

There was a touch of genuine passion in his words that redeemed their selfishness. Turning he caught her in an almost rough embrace.

"I love you. You understand that, Kitty? You'll always understand it—whatever happens? I love you—only, God help us, the things of hate are sometimes stronger than the things of love."

The words thrilled, the remembrance of them was to remain with her always, a haunting, torturing memory. But she made no effort to return his embrace or to retard it. She received it passively her face averted.

Sky Overcast

Martindale put her from him gently and went out of the room. Through the grass blind of her window she saw the gleam of his white drill as he passed and heard his voice hailing Baring on the veranda.

Late in the afternoon of the same day Kitty stood on the veranda at the back of the house, that looked out over the lantana hedge that hid the compound and the long rows of beehive huts of the servants' quarter, to that pencil smudge on the horizon that represented the beginning of the forest.

Overhead the sky was heavy and laden as she had rarely seen it in Africa, but toward the horizon the clouds were massed in ominous, blue-black intensity. There was a suggestive stillness in the air, the heads of the trees drooped dismally, and from the distant swamp came no sound of life; even the ceaseless chorus of the frogs, that sound which carries so far, had ceased. There was rain coming, and thunder; Kitty knew it with the absolute certainty of one who has a nervous and uncontrollable terror of it.

It was one of her physical weakness, this blind, unreasoning fear of a thunderstorm. Martindale might have remembered it from the old Wyndflete days, when for once he had been able to assert a manly superiority over his doughty protectress; the woman Carew had traded on it horribly.

And now the storm was coming up from the forest, the appalling thunderstorm of the tropics, and she was alone in the bungalow! Baring, against her wish, and a little to her surprise, had gone off on an exploring expedition alone. Martindale was absent on some of the interminable business connected with the estate—business that could not apparently be transacted without the assistance of the half-caste, Marco Gomez. The servants were never in the bungalow itself between the spells of their necessary work.

A Panic Seizes Kitty

A sudden panic seized Kitty as she looked toward those banks of lowering clouds. She caught up a scarf and went down the beaten clay path toward the compound, hardly knowing who or what she sought, spurred by the need of human companionship in her fear.

And almost before she had reached the entrance to the compound, round which the servants' huts clustered, the storm broke with a thunderclap that seemed to her to shake the universe. A great rent of lightning tore up the sky; the thunder echoed, roared and rumbled into a great silence.

Kitty, gathering her skirts about her, fled into the first shelter that presented itself, the huge godown inside the entrance of the compound, and with her hands pressed close against her eyes waited, while up from the distant forest, sweeping over the bending grass plains, the rain came rushing up with a noise like the drums of an advancing army.

The godown was a huge thatched, barn-like place built of dressed stone. Here the stores that provided so generously for their little world of Nokyoro were kept. The lightning, which split the sky continuously, lit up every corner of the dim place, that was divided into two sections by a partition, as clearly as the brightest illuminant could have done. But Kitty, crouching down among some great sacking covered bales, her face covered by her hands, saw nothing but the world of terror her imagination revealed; heard nothing but the crashing reports of the thunder, that seemed regular and well-timed as the precision firing of troops in salute.

Sheltered in the Godown

The rain beating on the thatched roof made a continuous and increasing sound. To the crouching woman it seemed impossible that this place of her refuge could long withstand the assault of the fierce elements against it. Outside the rain was churning the hard, sunbaked clay of the compound to a seething, boiling sea of brown mud, that threw up its spray a foot and more against the walls of the godown.

She drew in deep, sobbing breaths; terror stricken and dazed as she was she yet was capable of suffering the additional pang of fear for the man she loved. Where was Jack? Had this storm caught him defenseless in the open?

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Reassured

IT was quite an important case and Mr. Sixnate, the country lawyer, felt worried about the result. He was doubtful of his two witnesses.

So when the morning came for them to appear in court he himself called for them, and together the three drove in a small wagonette to the neighboring town.

Conversation flagged, and the lawyer grew despondent. As they passed a field of turnips the lawyer pointed to a number of rooks.

"Can you see those rooks there?" he asked.

"Yes," answered witness No. 1.

"Now, what color do you think they are?"

"White!" answered he who was going to speak the whole truth.

The attorney gasped.

"Ah! And what do you think?" he asked of No. 2.

"Oh, they're white, without a doubt!" said he.

Then the lawyer heaved a deep sigh of relief.

"Good! Very good!" [illegible] then, musingly: "I think we shall win our case all right to-day!"

A Man Student of Housewifery

By DOROTHY DIX

FOR the first time in the history of Columbia University a man has been enrolled in the Department of Household Arts, and will take a thorough course in housework.

The name of this Adam in the domestic Eden is John B. Leeds. He is an A. M., and he will get his Doctor's degree this year, and he lives at Morris Plains, N. J., where all proposals of marriage from single ladies, and divorcees, and widows in need of a good cook, who can't give notice and quit, will reach him.

Just as one swallow does not make a Spring, so one man who takes up the study of housewifery doesn't inaugurate a domestic millennium, but the example of Mr. Leeds is, at least, a hopeful prophecy of a better day coming in which husbands will have some comprehension of any sympathy with the tremendous labor involved in making a comfortable home.

The trouble heretofore with men in regard to domestic affairs has been that through colossal ignorance they have underestimated the difficulties of the job. It has seemed to them that keeping house was in the nature of a cinch, so dead easy that anybody could do it with one hand and no thought. Therefore that the woman did it well deserved no credit for it, and the one who failed at it was an incompetent fool beneath contempt.

His Opinion

Of course, every man observes that his wife manages to keep pretty busy for about eighteen hours a day, but he sets this down to her lack of executive ability. He also is of the opinion that her mania for picking up things off the floor and putting them away and dusting and scrubbing is a sort of harmless insanity common to her sex. Likewise when she complains of being tired and overworked, he shrugs his shoulders in disdain, and puffs out his chest, and says, "Nonsense! Just suppose you had to work like I do. I tell you I would think I had a regular picnic if I didn't have anything to do but just stay at home and run a house and take care of a baby or two."

Occasionally the man's theory of what a soft snap a woman has as a housewife gets a jolt, as, for example, when he undertakes to look after the children for a Sunday afternoon, and ascertains that one small, red infant can reduce a husky, able-bodied man to a nervous wreck in the course of a couple of hours, or when wife goes home to visit her mother, and he finds that after two days the house looks as if it had been in the path of a Kansas cyclone, and that he needs a search warrant to locate a clean shirt.

Then it begins to dawn upon him that clothes do not automatically pick themselves up off the floor and hang themselves on their proper hooks; that laundry is not a self-acting proposition that marches soiled linen into the tubs and back again, and that, perhaps, there is something, after all, in the feminine madness for sweeping and dusting.

Still the man's belief remains unshaken that there is no particular work or intelligence involved in performing these tasks, and that, while they would be work for a man, they are just play for a woman.

It is these heretical notions that a course in domestic science will knock out of the masculine head, and it is for this reason that it will be a glad sweet day when housewifery takes its place beside Latin and Greek and higher mathematics in the college curriculum.

Certainly the man who knows, from actual dealings with the butcher and baker and grocer, how much food costs, will not expect his wife to do the miracle act and feed a family on next to nothing. Certainly the man who has qualified as an expert sweeper, and who knows the back-breaking labor it is to wield a broom, will be more careful where he drops his cigar ashes and not strew them from one end of the house to the other. Certainly the man who has wrestled with incompetent servants, and who knows from personal experience how tricky a gas range can be, and how it can lie in wait to bring your best efforts at cooking to naught, will view with sympathy, and not disdain, his wife's culinary blunders.

A Better Understanding.

Anything that gives either sex a practical working knowledge of what the other has to contend with and endure makes for a better understanding and more good will and peace between them.

It does every woman good, and makes her a better wife, to have earned her own living before she was married. She is more careful of money because she knows the blood and sweat that go into the making of every dollar. She knows what sterling qualities it takes in a man to run a business, or hold down a good job, and she has more respect for her husband because she knows just what his success means.

She knows what the day's labor takes out of a man, how he gives body and brain and soul, to hold his own in the fierce competition of to-day, and how he comes home nerve racked and physically spent, and so she has a sympathy for him, a desire to spare him, and not vex him with foolish trifles that the woman cannot have who has never earned a cent in her life, and who thinks that in going to an office is as diverting as going to a matinee.

Thus, as a woman having been in business fits herself to understand what a man's work means, so a man having taken a course in housewifery will be able to comprehend and appreciate what a woman's work is, and the result is bound to promote domestic peace and harmony.

At any rate, there is no disputing the fact that a husband who, in addition to his other charms, could go into the kitchen when the hired girl left and turn out a first-class meal, would be the gilt edged prize in the matrimonial lottery.

SOLVED!

Willis—I wonder if there will ever be universal peace?

Gillis—Sure. All they've got to do is to get the nations to agree that in case of war the winner pays the pensions.

BLANCHE BATES A HIT IN COMEDY

Radiates Real Sunshine in "Nobody's Widow" at the Hollis Theatre.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

As a study in widows Blanche Bates has nothing to fear from competition. She is not only able to hold her own in every particular with that popular, not to say picturesque, branch of the feminine family, but she does it in a style that is peculiarly her own and by the same token, agreeable to those looking on.

And so, at the Hollis Street Theatre last evening, Miss Bates carried her widow's weeds into the centre of a group of interesting people who make Avery Hopwood's play, "Nobody's Widow," worth seeing. You get Miss Bates at her best, which means a woman may wear the black raiment of mourning in fashion in fashion's latest—you might say lipless—cut, and still hold tight to her sense of humor. Miss Bates proves her worth by giving real comedy quality to her Roxana Clayton. If jealously and divorce ever produced happiness it was accomplished at the Hollis last evening, with the audience taking its satisfaction in laughs.

Blanche Bates and Bruce McRae in one of the merriest scenes in "Nobody's Widow" at the Hollis.

Sparkling Good Humor.

It was no emotional role that fell to Miss Bates in "Nobody's Widow"—she left those behind in "The Fighting Hope" and "The Girl of the Golden West." Roxana was a disgusted person who had left her husband suddenly on the day of her wedding because he kissed another woman. There wouldn't have been any play if Roxana, six months later, had not walked almost into the arms of her husband at a house party at Palm Beach. She was posing as a widow to avoid scandal.

Out of this merry meeting with her departed husband Miss Bates and Bruce McRae, who played the husband, supplied an evening's entertainment that was sparkling with good humor. Miss Bates, who has had her fling at big, serious roles and never failed, should not be distressed if we mention quietly, but with great sincerity, that this light comedy—plain farce, if you prefer it that way—has taken her close to her audience; perhaps closer than her former emotional flights. Miss Bates not only knows comedy when it walks hand in hand with her, but she knows how to make it behave before a theatre full of critical people.

A rare thing about Miss Bates's acting is her confidence in the role she is playing and the confidence that she inspires in her audiences. You never feel in any doubt about her during the run of a performance.

Mr. McRae was also very much at home in "Nobody's Widow." The role of a departed husband trying to win back his wife's love in the face of fearful odds gave him many moments of hard work, but he took excellent care of himself.

Gives Out Real Sunshine.

There was a refreshing style to Adelaide Prince's Betty Jackson, a divorcee who was bored to death by the unresponsive manner of her devoted young man. Miss Prince's misery was delightfully amusing.

"Nobody's Widow" enjoys all the luxury of production that David Belasco could devise, and in this respect Mr. Belasco did not hesitate or stint. The play itself is a series of adroitly arranged situations that turn the sunny side of life toward the friendly side of the house, and in the performance at the Hollis last evening Miss Bates, by skilful acting, made herself a medium of good cheer that will not be forgotten. "Nobody's Widow" wins by its laugh.

Tremont.

Among "those present" at the Tremont Theatre were "Madame Sherry," that tune-about-town "Every Little Movement"; the S. R. O. sign and as many people as could get into the house.

On the stage were Lina Abarbanell, dancing, singing and acting with seductive charm; Charles J. Ross, genuinely amusing; the refreshing Mr. Ignacio Martinetti, Jack Gardner and the rest.

It was Boston's first long-awaited chance to see the famous musical comedy of Messrs. Hauerbach and Felix, "versionized," as it were, by Karl Hoschna. Great expectations of a sprightly, tuneful evening were realized and there was applause from the rise of the curtain. The advance sale of seats, coupled with the rush just before the performance began, made the "Standing Room Only" sign necessary before the curtain went up.

This musical comedy has a plot, plenty of merry music, rising to more than the usual musical comedy plane, bright lines and plenty of lively action.

Edouard Sherry (Jack Gardner) has a rich and doting uncle in the Hebrides and increases his allowance by representing to uncle that he is a family man. Uncle (Charles J. Ross) arrives unexpectedly, as uncle will, accompanied by Cousin Yvonne (Lina Abarbanell). It is up to Edouard to produce a spouse and he persuades the housekeeper to serve, pro tem. With this start there are complications which pile up, then straighten out and end happily, as they should, to the final bliss of Edouard and Cousin Yvonne.

Miss Abarbanell sang seductively, danced with alluring grace and introduced artistic bits of acting in reading her lines. Mr. Ross was Uncle Theophilus to a satisfactory degree. Mr. Gardner portrayed the ingenious Edouard in highly humorous manner. Mr. Martinetti was his versatile self, especially in dancing. The other members of the cast were well placed in their parts. Taking the production, for comedy, music and cast, it justified the high reputation which has preceded it for delightful entertainment.

Plymouth.

Although universal sentiment will declare the two-act drama, "The Cross Roads," as portrayed by the Irish players at the Plymouth Theatre last night, is a miniature masterpiece, the lack of enthusiasm displayed by the audience at the drop of the final curtain is a source of regret. The theme, however, is depressing because it is much too real.

The plot has to do with the hasty wooing, subsequent marriage and home life of Ellen McCarthy, daughter of a widow living in the farm lands of Ireland. Sara Allgood is at her best in the leading role. The play opens with Ellen lately returned from Dublin, where she had been studying scientific farming. Brian Connor, portrayed by Fred O'Donovan, whom she met in Dublin, follows her home to ask for her hand. In the meantime her mother has arranged a match with Tom Dempsey, a well-to-do-farmer neighbor. Ellen accepts Dempsey after professing her love for Connor.

The second act opens with a lapse of seven years. Mrs. Dempsey is huddled in a gloomy farmhouse. Dempsey denounces his wife for the failure of her experiments and declares that with her came an everlasting curse into the household. Connor enters. Ellen leaves to "feed the chickens." The men quarrel and Connor attempts to kill Dempsey and then tries to persuade Ellen to leave her husband. She refuses and the curtain falls upon Dempsey's threat to return and flog his wife.

The second event of the evening, Bernard Shaw's "The Sewing Up of Blanche Posnet," was well received by the audience as an admirable selection for an after piece.

Globe Theatre.

"The Newly Weds and Their Baby" are throwing the audiences into fits with their amusing antics at the Globe Theatre this week. The comedy is founded on George McManus's cartoons. The book is by Aaron Hoffman and Paul West and the music and lyrics by Seymour Brown and Nat D. Ayer. John W. Bratton gives everybody the "ha has" with the attempt of Professor August Nichol to take the place made vacant in his museum by Major Knott Much, the midget.

Charles A. Morgan, as the proud father, carries his part in fine style. Olga von Hatzfeldt as Mrs. Newlywed and Pall Smith as Tom Travers are everything the play could ask for. Some fine musical numbers are distributed through the piece. One of the big hits of the show is the rendition of "My Sweitzer Bride," by Miss von Hatzfeldt and Billie Townley.

Keith's.

Lillian Russell was enthusiastically welcomed at B. F. Keith's Theatre yesterday. She is as successful in winning her audiences in vaudeville as she was in "Lady Teazle" and "The School for Scandal." Her offering consists in a number of songs, most of them catchy little ditties. The fair Lillian gives no sign of her years except in the case of her presence and her perfect self-posession on the stage. Even in the glare of the spotlight, her cheeks are as smooth, her eyes as bright and her eyebrows as arched as ever. Incidentally, she wore a gown that was, according to the women in the audience, a wonderful creation.

The rest of the program is very good. "Van Hoven," the dippy magician, "who," the program says, "will make you laugh," is the best of the lot. Does he get the laugh? He surely does. But you can't just explain how he does it. He calls for two boys and when he gets them on the stage—it's the funniest thing you ever saw.

Paul Seldom's poseurs were remarkable and artistic. "Meet Me at the Fountain" was catchy. John Corcoran and Harlan Dixon, burnt cork artists, were very clever. The Braagar brothers, on the horizontal bars, Froehlich, the comic cartoonist, the Elite entertainers in a comedy act, the Abdallahs, acrobats, and Jones and Deely were all good, and the whole forms a rattling good bill.

Castle Square.

"As You Like It," the first of this season's Shakespearian productions, is playing this week at the Castle Square theatre. The selection is a fitting tribute to Mr. Craig's ability as manager of a stock company.

The opening performance was especially given yesterday afternoon for the school children of Greater Boston. The company has achieved first-class success in "As You Like It" and Orlando and Rosalind's love story has never been more pleasingly portrayed.

Miss Young makes Rosalind, the principal character of the play, one of Shakespeare's most romantic heroines. She is gay, lively and entrancingly masculine when she clothes herself in the doublet and hose. Mabel Montgomery, the latest addition to Mr. Craig's company, plays Celia in a charming manner. Miss Colcord's Audrey is the personification of mirth.

Mr. Hassell is exceptionally good as Jacques and Mr. Morgan Wallace is a decided treat in his interpretation of Touchstone. Mr. Craig won the big audience in his role of Orlando. Mr. Roberts and Mr. Middlemass are excellent in their respective parts.

"The Right of Way," a dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel will be presented at the Castle Square Theatre next week.

Gaiety.

There was much more than the usual amount of entertainment in efforts of the Bowery Burlesquers at the Gaiety Theatre yesterday. There was unexpected quality in much that was passed across the footlights, especially in the interpolated features. Brown, Lee and Green in a singing and dancing novelty, proved positive winners, and the travesty on "Madame X" was well worth the time it added to the performance. This travesty was alive with rich humor and kept the audience both bewildered and in laughter. But few popular priced entertainments can equal in value that shown at the Gaiety this week.

New National.

The show at the New National Theatre this week is easily the best that has been presented at that popular priced playhouse since it opened. The feature of the bill is Gilbert & Sullivan's opera, "Pinafore," given by the National-Boston Comic Opera company. It is the first time this opera has ever been seen on a vaudeville stage.

The National-Boston Comic Opera company is made up of an all-star cast of well-known Boston favorites, among them William Wolfe, William H. Fitzgerald, J. K. Murray, Harry Davies, Clara Lane and others.

Besides the opera, there are several other feature acts on the bill, including the great Richards, impersonator, who has an excellent act; the Heim children, in vaudeville; "Rained In," Le Roy and Harvey's Western playlet, and Holden and Leclaire's comedy sketch in shadows.

Grand Opera.

"Beyond the Divide," a Western drama, is drawing crowded houses at the Grand Opera House this week, and the play is one of the best of its kind that has ever been brought to Boston. Filled with realistic battle, flood and cave scenes typical of the lawless days in the Far West, intermingled with the action of the scout hero who frustrates the plans of the renegade by outwitting him in the pinches, the play furnishes enough sensations and thrills to cover twice the period of time it takes to go through the show.

The piece is presented by an excellent company.

Orpheum Theatre.

Among the big features in the new programme at the Orpheum Theatre yesterday was Fred Carmen in a loop rolling act that astonished the audience. Other vaudeville novelties and a new list of motion pictures made up one of the best bills of the year.

Shubert Theatre.

Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" will have its first performance in Boston at the Shubert Theatre to-morrow evening.

South End Theatre.

The big feature of the new programme at the South End Theatre yesterday was "Colleen Bawn," a moving picture taken in Ireland with all the natural beauty of the native scenery. The vaudeville part of the programme includes several new acts.

Hub Theatre.

Several new vaudeville features and a long list of interesting motion picture subjects made up the new programme at the Hub Theatre yesterday.

Scenic Temple.

"The Musical Revue," with new numbers, remains at the Scenic Temple, where large audiences enjoyed the entertainment yesterday. There were also new motion pictures.

Howard Athenaeum.

The Ducklings arrived at the Old Howard yesterday and furnished one of the best burlesque shows of the season. Two lively burlettas, with Charles Boyle doing most of the humorous work, made up the bill. There was also a special vaudeville programme.

Apollo Theatre.

The new programme of pictures and vaudeville at the Apollo Theatre yesterday made good with the audiences both afternoon and evening. The vaudeville features were equal in quality to anything ever given for the price.

Waldron's Casino.

The new burlesque entertainment at Waldron's Casino Theatre yesterday was called the "Majestics." It was alive with rich comedy and pretty girls.

Coronation Pictures.

The coronation pictures at Tremont Temple are attracting crowds from all parts of New England. This new idea in motion photography—making pictures in colors—has been the sensation of the year.

Austin & Stone's.

Several new features were introduced in the curio hall at Austin & Stone's Museum yesterday, and a brand new program was presented in the theatre.

Plays That Hold Over

"The Gamblers" continues at the Majestic Theatre, where large audiences are being entertained by this stage picture of frenzied finance.

Lulu Glaser and "Miss Dudelsack" began the final week of their engagement at the Boston Theatre last evening. The music is tuneful and the comedy refreshing.

The final week of "The Red Widow" was begun at the Colonial Theatre last evening. Raymond Hitchcock has never had a more comical role than that supplied him in this piece.

"Get Rich Quick Wallingford" began a new week at the Park Theatre last evening. The quaint humor of Mr. Cohan's play makes it one of the season's treats.

Next Week's Plays.

"Pomander Walk" will be the attraction at the Plymouth next week.

"The Three Romeos," with a big cast, will come to the Colonial next Monday.

"The Right of Way" will be John Craig's offering at the Castle Square Theatre next week.

"The Smart Set" will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House next week.

TUFTS SOPHS PULL FRESHMEN INTO WATER

After two desperate pulls, in which every inch of ground was bitterly contested, the sophomores of Tufts College proved their superiority over the freshmen in the annual tug-of-war yesterday afternoon by winning both times. The 200-foot rope was stretched over a pond in the Tufts athletic field, and the freshmen were unfortunate enough to be ducked twice, while the sophomores did not even wet their feet. With sixty men on each end of the rope, the sophomores got the jump and in time hauled the rope well into their territory, and the committee of upper-class men who were acting as judges signalled a win for the sophs.

AUGUST BELMONT TO CONTINUE RACING

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 24.—August Belmont, chairman of the New York Jockey Club, denies reports originating in New York and London that he intended to quit racing in America and ship his horses to England or France and start a breeding establishment. Mr. Belmont is at his nursery stock farm near Lexington and said he intended to continue the breeding of thoroughbreds here.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS

STOCK MARKET STEADY TO-DAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—An advance of half a point in Reading was the capital feature of trading at the opening of the stock market to-day. Although the general tone seemed firm, trading was narrow and quietness prevailed in nearly all the important issues. Price movements were so narrow as to be hardly worth noticing.

Immaterial fractional gains were made in Rock Island, International Harvester, Mo. Pacific, Union Pacific and Amalgamated Coppers.

U. S. Steel common and preferred both opened unchanged. The common yielded ¼ upon selling, which set in immediately following the opening. This was attributed to reports current in Wall street that the steel corporation is to divest itself of its Tennessee Coal & Iron holdings, following announcements of its determination to cancel its Great Northern Ore losses.

Losses were sustained in a few other of the industrials. At the end of the first fifteen minutes slight improvement was shown in the market's tone.

The curb market opened unchanged.

Sentiment in Americans in the London market was cheerful in tone, although there were no changes in prices.

BIGGEST TANNERY BURNED.

ASHLAND, Ky., Oct. 24.—The plant of the Sneland Leather Company, the largest tannery in the United States, was destroyed by fire early to-day with a loss of $215,000. The fire was accidentally started by the night watchman, who dropped a lighted match into a barrel of oil.

In-and-out trading is the rule, and the trader who buys in the morning may sell out in the afternoon. This keeps the market alive, at any rate, and prevents stagnation. Anything is preferable to a market that goes to sleep or remains inert.

Announcement that the Russian government proposes barring imports of foreign machinery held as a bull argument for International Harvester. The corporation is well intrenched in that country. The issue has gained more than nine points from September's low, when the program of voluntary dissolution was announced. The company has been following the policy of making itself independent of foreign tariffs, and has factories in Germany, Sweden and France.

Interests identified with the Steel Trust were anxious to have it known that its intention to cancel the Hill ore lease is not due to the Sherman Anti-Trust law or the Hepburn Commodity law. The trust wants to get rid of the ore lands because the lease is believed to be unprofitable. The ore is streaked with sand in such proportions as to make it difficult to mine. Now that the Steel Trust will discontinue mining the ore properties after three years, the dividend outlook for the certificates is uncertain. It is particularly so because, since the ore lease was made, other bodies of better ore have been discovered in Canada, and it is understood that the trust can import the ore cheaper than it can mine it in the Great Northern properties. The higher metallic value and greater degree of dryness of the Canadian ore make this possible. Contrary to the general belief, the ore certificates are very widely scattered, Europe in particular having taken great quantities of them. One institution in New York that ought to be a large holder if the certificates are considered valuable for investment is said to possess only 20,000 shares.

The complaint of the Home Telephone Company of Tennessee that the Cumberland Telephone, a subsidiary of the "trust," is a common carrier and therefore must receive long distance messages for forwarding is not a bear argument on American Telephone. Increased traffic means additional revenue. And furthermor the Home Company will soon realize that by becoming a subsidiary of the "trust," as the Missouri and Kansas Telephone has done voluntarily, it can operate more economically.

FR. VAUGHN TO LECTURE HERE

The Rev. Bernard Vaughn, the famous English Jesuit, will arrive at Boston College on Saturday, November 4, to begin a series of sermons on the following Sunday. He is now making a lecture tour of this country and Canada.

While in Boston the subject of his sermons will be four answers to the question "Why Be a Catholic?" The sermons will be delivered in the Church of the Immaculate Conception. The subject of the first two sermons, Sunday, November 5, will be the first answer to his question: "Because It Means Incorporation in Christ."

COOK BOOK IS READY FOR YOU

'Tis said that the best way to reach a man's heart is through his stomach, and that is why so many women are calling at the premium department of the AMERICAN for a copy of the Lowney Cook Book. This book, easily worth $1.25, can be obtained for fifteen coupons clipped from the AMERICAN and forty-five cents.

This book will not be denied to the male readers of the AMERICAN. Lots of the men folks go camping and fishing. The book contains some simple recipes that can be prepared on hunting trips. Marie Willett Howard, formerly principal of the Boston Cooking School, prepared the contents of the cook book, therefore it must be good.

DUCKY
When wifey passes that "Ducky Dear" stuff, or slips over some other soft-soap expression, you think you are the whole thing. Oftentimes you are being jollied and don't know it. When it comes to passing the josh, the folks at home are only amateurs as compared with the Duckling Burlesquers, who are here this week. Always something doing from 1 till 11 at the Old Howard.
DUCKLING BURLESQUERS
The Ducklings can put over the high sign of good cheer and make you sit up, roll over and jump through. In fact, you'll vote them the best ever. Tony Kennedy, Charley Boyle are some funsters, and Beatrice Harlowe and Madge Hughes will have the bald tops guessing.

Proposals.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS—Metropolitan Park Commission—Notice: Sealed proposals for furnishing two boats to be used in breaking ice in the channels of the Charles River Basin will be received at the office of the Metropolitan Park Commission, 14 Beacon street, Boston, Mass., until 12 o'clock m. of Monday, November 6, 1911, at which time and place the bids will be publicly opened and read. The boats shall not be less than 70 feet long, 18 feet beam, and shall have engines of not less than 250 horsepower. The price shall be quoted at a rate per hour, for not less than eight hours' work on any one order, and the time shall be computed from the time the boat arrives at the entrance to the Charles River Dam lock until it leaves the lock to return to its wharf, with deductions for any delays from causes beyond the control of the Commission. During the time of employment the boats will be under the direction and subject to the orders of the Engineer of the Commission or other duly authorized agents. The bidder will also be required to furnish evidence that he is able to substitute other boats of equal capacity in case of accident, either to the boat or machinery while in use, in case the machinery or boat breaks down, no compensation will be made for the time that the boat is unable to work. Boat must be sent to the work within four hours' notice of the time it is required by the Engineer of the Commission or other duly authorized agents. In the employment of mechanics and laborers, on the work to be done under this contract, preference shall be given to citizens of the Commonwealth, and, if they cannot be had in sufficient numbers, then to citizens of the United States. (Chapter 311 of the Acts of 1904.) Neither the contractor nor his agents or employes shall, either directly or indirectly, require as a condition of the employment of any person that the employe shall lodge, board or trade at any particular place or with a particular person, but every employe shall lodge, board or trade where and with whom he elects. (Revised Laws, Chapter 106, Section 13.) No laborer, workman or mechanic working within this Commonwealth in the employ of the contractor, sub-contractor or other person doing or contracting to do the whole or a part of the work contemplated by the contractor shall be requested or required to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day. (Chapter 494 of the Acts of 1911.) The Commission reserves the right to reject any and all proposals or to accept the proposal deemed best for the Commonwealth. WILLIAM B. DE LAS CASAS, EDWIN U. CURTIS, DAVID N. SKILLINGS, ELLERTON P. WHITNEY, EVERETT C. BENTON, Metropolitan Park Commission; JOHN R. RABLIN, Engineer.

PROPOSALS for constructing by contract two battleships, Nos. 36 and 37, will be received at the Navy Department until 12 o'clock, noon, January 4, 1912, when they will be publicly opened. A circular of requirements for said vessels is now ready and plans and specifications for their construction will be ready November 1 for distribution among prospective bidders. Forms of proposal and contract may be had on application to the Department after November 15. G. V. L. MEYER, Secretary. October 18, 1911.

Standpat and Reactionary Lodge-Crane Machine Again Needs Lesson of Defeat

At the last election the progressive Republicans of Massachusetts defeated the Republican machine and its titular leader, Ex-Governor Draper, and cast a majority of votes for candidates pledged against the re-election of Senator Lodge. There were several vital reasons which led these progressive Republicans to determine that the Republican machine, under the control of Senators Lodge and Crane, ought to be defeated.

First: For some years past the mystic circle wherein lay all the honors and emoluments of public life in Massachusetts and even all good private positions in commerce and industry had been steadily growing smaller as the Republican machine grew stronger.

It had finally come to pass that a young man with the slightest symptom of independence, a young man who dared to utter a thought which he could call his own, not only lost all hope of success in public affairs, but, in many instances, seriously jeopardized his opportunities in private business. The Lodge-Crane machine had assumed control of legislation and the Republican State Committee was filled with professional lobbyists, the king of whom was Wardwell, Lodge's man Friday.

Second: Governor Draper was a creature of this machine. He believed in it, obeyed it and profited by his obedience until the great day of reckoning with the people.

Third: The citizens of Massachusetts had seen their Senators throwing the weight of Massachusetts, in the United States Senate, upon the side of the dollar and against the man, on almost every roll call, helping to surfeit those who had too much at the expense of those who had nothing. The citizens of Massachusetts saw their Senators, Lodge and Crane, ally themselves with the detested Aldrich and bring down upon Massachusetts the dislike and distrust of the progressive people throughout the country.

They saw Senators Lodge and Crane join with Aldrich, Hale, Burrows, Carter, Penrose and the rest of the reactionary standpat group in the Senate, to break the promise of the Republican party, made in its last State convention, to revise the tariff downward, by deliberately and faithlessly revising it upward.

They saw the trusts grow more bloated every day with the ill-gotten gains from the necessities of the American people and they saw the necessaries of life rise higher and higher until it has become a serious question whether the American standard of living must not be lowered.

They knew it was the high protective tariff behind which the trusts were operating and by means of which they were enabled to compel the American people to pay more for the necessaries of life which they controlled than they charged the people of Europe for those very necessaries, after they had transported them thousands of miles across the ocean.

These were the reasons which swept the Republican party out of power in the National House of Representatives and has retired to private life almost all the reactionaries in the United States Senate save the two Massachusetts Senators, with one of whom the people have not yet had a chance to deal, and against the other of whom a majority of votes at the last election was cast.

These were the reasons which have changed the United States Senate from the lair of privilege to the control of the progressive elements.

Since last election what has happened that should change the attitude of these liberal progressive Republicans who drove the Lodge-Crane machine out of power by the election of Governor Foss?

Governor Foss has served his year, making a record that has compelled the Lodge-Crane machine to avoid State issues in this campaign. Every promise and every prediction which he made during the last campaign has been fulfilled except in those matters which the remaining power of the stand-pat Republicans have succeeded in delaying.

Governor Foss declared during the last campaign that his election would have a great influence upon the prospect of revising the tariff. He was elected and almost immediately the President negotiated the Reciprocity treaty with Canada.

This was done under the whip and spur of Democratic success, for the President had approved the Payne-Aldrich bill which had revised the tariff upwards, and had declared that it was the best tariff bill which had ever been passed, and had been associated in his tariff labors with Aldrich and Hale in the Senate and Cannon and Tawney in the House. A President with such associates would have been the last man in the world to have negotiated a Reciprocity treaty, if Democratic success and the uprising of liberal Republicans had not compelled it.

Prices on food went down when the Reciprocity bill was negotiated, and went up when Canada, in her folly, rejected it. But the new Congress sought to reduce the cost of living on other necessaries of life as well as on food. The tariff on the products of cotton wool were reduced to cheapen our clothing. The tariff on shoes was taken away.

This honest revision downward passed a Democratic House and Republican Senate and was vetoed by President Taft, under the pretense that the revision should be scientifically made according to the recommendations of a tariff board, which will not and cannot add to the information of Congress anything Congress does not know already.

So the conditions which led to the defeat of Governor Draper and the Lodge-Crane machine exist unchanged to-day.

The Lodge and Crane machine still controls the Republican party. It is still reactionary and standpat.

Its figurehead is still a reactionary with a more standpat record even than Governor Draper's.

The cost of living is still high, because the work of driving the reactionaries out of the Republican party and out of the government has not yet been completed.

Under these circumstances who can doubt that the result of the coming election will be even more disastrous to the Republican candidates than it was last year.

The machine leaders consider it good policy to claim everything but in their hearts they expect nothing this year but disaster.

THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A GOOD WARM BED AFTER A DAY'S GUNNING IN THE WOODS GEE' BUT I'M TIRED!
TOMORROW I'M GOING AFTER BIGGER GAME.. HUH!
WHAT IS THIS? WHO ARE YOU? DID YOU SHOOT?
NO! IT WASN'T YOU! IT IS SOME-
ONE BEHIND ME! OH! LOOK THERE'S A BUNCH COMING!
I'LL HAVE TO DUCK MY HEAD UNDER THE BED CLOTHES!
I SEEM TO BE RESTLESS TONIGHT SOME HOW I DO NOT SLEEP GOOD!

The American Girl Not Safe When Allowed to Go About Alone

It Is Appalling, Says Mrs. Wilcox, to See the Childlike Simplicity of the Average American Mother in Her Attitude Toward Her Daughter.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Ella Wheeler Wilcox

NOWHERE in the world can be found another land which produces so many beautiful and bright young girls as America.

This is because we are a composite nation; and this generation of girls under twenty-five shows the marked characteristics of mixed bloods.

There are few families in America to-day which have kept in all branches strictly American.

Other ultra-fashionable people have intermarried with Spanish, Cuban, Italian, French families, and our whole rank and file of middle and laboring classes are doing likewise, adding Swedish, Danish, Norwegian and Russian nationalities to the long list.

As a result, American young men and women are as varied in their types as flowers in a garden, and when we look in at a Summer resort function, anywhere in America, we are dazzled with the variety of beautiful faces we see, just as we are when we watch the armies of girls emerging from shops and factories and business offices in any of our large cities.

Here and there we will see the strictly American type, and here and there we will find the family tree with no grafted branch, but it is the exception to-day in America.

Meantime our country seems to keep its American ideas, and its American habits regarding the liberty allowed young girls. While foreign blood is mixed in their veins, yet foreign restrictions are lacking in their education.

In the early days of our Puritan forefathers young girls were safe in company of young men, and the chaperon was unknown.

To-day the young girl is not safe when allowed to go about freely and unprotected with young men.

It is appalling to see the childlike simplicity of the average American mother in her attitude toward her daughter.

A few fashionable families, who have associated with European nations, have adopted European ideas and rules, and guard their young girls from too much liberty. But when we come to know facts regarding these few families, astonishing revelations come to light.

For instance, one beauty and belle in a large American metropolis met a man of the world at one of the first large balls she attended after her debut and was induced, with little urging, to take a wild ride at midnight alone with him, while her mother and friends thought she was having refreshments with a "friend of the family."

The story (of course related by the man boastfully) came to the father's ears and the "friend of the family" was obliged to flee from one part of the world to another, pursued by the avenging parent.

Such an experience could not have happened to a girl in any other country of the earth.

The American mother does not talk with her young daughter about the fundamental facts of life, and she allows her to grow up romantic, sentimental, egotistical, liberty-loving and pleasure-craving, and expects her own good sense and modesty to protect her.

That so many American girls do become good wives and mothers, and respected and respectable matrons, speaks well for human nature.

All over America young girls, from fourteen to nineteen, are seen daily going to and from High School unattended by any older person.

Not one parent in five hundred, it may be safely asserted, ever takes special care to know detailed happenings to the school girls on their way to and from school and after school hours.

The tragedies which occur in American schools would fill volumes were they written down in plain recitals.

The parents are usually the last persons to suspect, and the last to believe that their daughters have erred, and when the awful facts are revealed to them they blame everybody but themselves.

What are you doing, oh mothers and fathers of America, to save your young daughters from imprudence, from folly, from indiscretion?

What do you, who read these words, absolutely know, about the thoughts and actions of your young daughters?

What have you ever said to her to make her feel that she could come to you with every puzzling problem regarding her own nature?

And what are you going to say to her after you read this?

"Souvenirs"

By JAMES W. M'GEE

THE mania for souvenirs grows day by day,
Like the spread of a big prairie fire,
Till the souvenir hunter will now walk away
With whatever he's apt to admire.
By he I don't mean that the men do it all,
For the ladies take their's without fear;
They simply explain when they're stripped of a haul,
"Why, it's only a slight souvenir."

They can show you a spoon from a Paris cafe,
With a clock from a London hotel;
From Berlin just a trifle, a small silver tray,
And from Athens a quaint Grecian bell.
They have tokens from every place under the sun,
Which they're adding to year after year,
And each article down, from a clock to a gun,
Bears the magical name, "Souvenir."

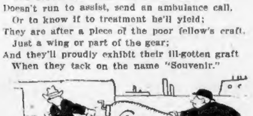
The crowd that runs out on the field
Doesn't run to assist, send an ambulance call,
Or to know if to treatment he'll yield;
They are after a piece of the poor fellow's craft,
Just a wing or part of the gear;
And they'll proudly exhibit their ill-gotten graft
When they tack on the name "Souvenir."



When a big foreign warship drops in for a call,
And a crowd clambers madly on board,
In the warship itself they've no interest at all,
Tho' they have in the Admiral's sword.
If a big ten-inch gun could be hoisted ashore
When no bluejacket sentries were near,
It is safe to assume there'd be quite an uproar
Over who owned the big "Souvenir."
